Reagan Requests Extension of Arms Talks to Offer U.S. Plan

By David Hoffman Warington Post Service
WASHINGTON — President

Ronald Reagan said Thursday that he has asked the Soviet leader. Mikhail S. Gorbachev, to extend the current round of Geneva arms negotiations so that the United States can present a new proposal that envisions "deep cuts" in nuclear missile arsenals.

The U.S. negotiators were to present the new proposal to the Russians in Geneva on Friday, he said. The extension, if granted by the Soviet side, would allow both sides to have "a real give-and-take" on the proposal, he said.
Mr. Reagan said the new proposal was "serious" and "detailed" and covered all three areas of the negotiations — strategic, intermediate-range and space weapons.

The new proposal was approved by the president this week after Western leaders urged him to make such an offer before the Nov. 19-20 summit meeting with Mr. Gorbachev in Geneva.

The offer came as a response to Mr. Gorbachev's call early in October for a 50-percent cut in nuclear weapons.

Mr. Reagan said the United States had told Moscow that the Soviet offer "unfortunately fell significantly short in several key ar-seeds which we wish to nurture." Reagan administration sources said the proposal would require a 50-percent reduction in Soviet ballistic missile warheads, from about 8,900 to about 4,500 for land-based and sea-based missiles. The proposal also included a limit of 3.000 warheads on the Soviet land-based missiles. Currently, the Soviet Union has about 6,400 warheads on landbased missiles and 2,500 on seabased weapons. The United States has 2.130 warheads on land and 5.370 at sea. These do not include missiles, nor intermediate-range weapons based in Europe.

Mr. Reagan, speaking at the White House, made it clear that the U.S. proposal did not agree to limit his Strategic Defensive Institutive, a program to develop space-based bullistic mussile defenses. He said that he wanted to explore with the Soviet Union "how people everywhere can benefit from exploring the potential of nonnuclear defenses which threaten no one."

The president said the recent exchange of proposals marked a "suc-cessful start" to a "long process" of reducing nuclear arms.

He described his mun criteria for any agreement with the Soviet Union as "deep cuts, no first-strike advantage, defensive research because defense is safer than offense, and no cheating."

On Thursday, Mr. Reagan was interviewed by four Soviet journalcas" but that it "also has positive ists, whom he told that he would accept some of the figures outlined by Soviet negotiators under Mr.

Gorbachev's proposals.

Administration officials also disclosed that Secretary of State George P. Shultz will confer in Moscow early next week with Soviet officials about the possibility of a second summit meeting between the two leaders.

WASHINGTON - Some Arab nations, including Egypt and Jor-dan, have urged the Soviet Union to restore diplomatic relations with Israel as a way to advance prospects for Middle East peace talks, according to Israeli and Reagan administration officials.

Israel has refusal to take part in any international conference on the Middle East that includes the Soviet Union, unless Moscow first restores ties with Israel. The United States, a senior administration official said Wednesday, will inform the Russians in coming weeks that it supports the Israeli position.

The Egyptians and Jordanians, in unpublicized approaches to the Soviet Union, have said that a lack of relations with Israel is delaying holding of a conference that could lead to actual peace talks, Israeli and U.S. officials said. The officials did not name the other Arab countries involved. The conference proposal has become more significant because King Hussein of Jordan and Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israel have said that this forum could open the way for direct negotiations between Israel and a joint Jordan-Palestinian group. After opposing a conference, the United States and Israel now indicate that they would be willing to attend. But they have said there must be a firm agreement beforehand that it will serve as a means to direct talks and not have the power to decide anything. Richard W. Murphy, the U.S.

assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern and South Asian affairs, said Wednesday in testimony to a congressional subcommittee that "the peace process is at a delicate stage, but a hopeful one."
"In the past several months," he said, "we have been able to come closer than ever before to agreement on the kinds of steps that will be required. Even with Soviet participation. an international meeting would have no guarantee of success, because the presence of the two superpowers, in any role, could make reaching a consensus difficult.

The Soviet Union broke relations with Israel in June 1967 to demonstrate support for the Arab side in the Middle East war that ended that month. Moscow's official position is that although it recognizes Israel as a sovereign state, will not restore relations until Israel agrees to withdraw from the lands it seized in that war. The major obstacle to negotiations remains the Israeli conditions about the makeup of any Palestinian contingent to peace talks. The Israelis have repeatedly refused to deal with the Palestine Liberation Organization, but King Hussein has said he is committed to including that group.

Mr. Murphy, who made an un-week, said he had not yet received a report from the Jordanians about the meetings this week between King Hussein and Yasser Arafat, the PLO chairman. Mr. Murphy said it was clear that Jordan was unhappy with several recent acts of terrorism by Palestinian groups. whether or not they were directed by Mr. Arafat's organization.

In his first public comments since his mission, Mr. Murphy told the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on the Middle East that the region "is at one of those moments in its history when events have begun to come together in a way in which, with efforts from all sides, a peace process can be substantially advanced and we can hope to see the opening of negotiations in the near future."

But he warned that there was not much time remaining. "The win-dow of opportunity is fast slipping away," he said.

Poland, a close ally of the Soviet Union, has announced an exchange of diplomatic interests sections with Israel. This is only one step away from full diplomatic relations, and would not have been (Continued on Page 6, Col. 1)

Immigrants Threaten Nation's Character, It Asserts

PARIS — The publication of an article asserting that French identity and culture are threatened by the growing immigrant population has touched off a political furor in

The debate has been intensifying since Saturday, when Le Figaro Magazine, the conservative weekly supplement to the daily newspaper, published an article asking: "Will France still be French in 2015?" The cover featured a picture of Marianne, symbol of France, wearing an Arab woman's veil affixed by a rosette in red, white and blue, the colors of France.

The article, written by Jean Raspail, a prominent French writer, and Gérard François Dumont, a demographer who heads the Institute of Political Demography, asserts that the proportion of France's non-European immigrant population will grow to a point that endangers the survival of tradition-al French culture, values and iden-

It also has been cited frequently by political analysts as the issue that has helped boost the political fortunes of Jean-Marie Le Pen, leader of the extreme-right National Front, the country's fastestgrowing political party. At a rally last week, Mr. Le Pen told approxi-mately 90,000 cheering supporters that "immigration is the number one problem facing our country."

According to the last census in 1982, immigrants total about 3.7 million of France's 54 million people. The regional membership drive that led to the petition was one of several conducted by the American Federation of Government Employees.

Although the issue never was raised directly, the clear implication of the ruling was that only a nationwide unit would be authorized to bargain with the controllers' employer, the Federal Avia-tion Administration.

Now a third union, the Manne Engineers Beneficial Association, is giving consideration to organizing the controllers, according to labor sources outside that union.

The controllers have not been represented by a union since the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization was stripped of its bargaining rights after calling a walkout in August 1981. The union was decertified because it had violated the law barring strikes by fed-eral employees. On the same ground, the Reagan administration dismissed 11,400 controllers who went out on strike.

Believing in the future means looking ahead. In cars, looking ahead means BMW.

Whether people demand more from a top-class car than the conventional idea of sophistication and quality is ultimately a question of how great their expectations are and how deep their personal level of technical appreciation. Someone who is used to making not only exceptional but also highly individual demands is seldom satisfied with the traditional demonstrative attitude towards status when it comes to choosing a top-quality car.

What actually attracts you personally to a top-class car? Conventional technologies?

Because in the end analysis our present, and even more our future, are shaped by innovation.

Taken from that farsighted point of view, a BMW represents the unconventional, alternative attitude towards exclusivity.

Especially where technology is concerned. But then that's exactly why the large BMW has come to be recognised all over the world as the outstanding illustration of how a car can justify its claim to exclusivity not merely through its luxury but also through its out of the ordinary, progressive technologies. And underlying BMW's success with drivers all over the world is the philosophy of always passing on those technologies as quickly as possible to its customers.

Just take, for instance, what two highly respected motoring journalists had to say about the BMW 745i:

"At this moment in time, no other manufacturer is providing more conclusive proof that the engine technology of the future is totally inseparable from engine electronics." (Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeltung)

"High performance motoring plus favourable consumption and acceptable emission levels demand exceptional technological know-how, a basic reappraisal of the internal combustion engine ... and engine electronics.

And no other standard production car... offers such an all-embracing engine/transmission management system." (Schweizer Automobil Revue)

But much more important, aren't your own highly personal demands - and your own realisation that without the very latest technologies tomorrow's problems will never be solved enough good reasons for choosing the forward-looking solution the next time you come to buying a top-class car?

Today, there's already one car that through its innovative electronic solutions has come a long way along the road to solving tomorrow's problems.

Not least amongst them, the need for greater environmental awareness without any loss in the performance and dynamism that are so essential to motoring safety.

So why should you settle for driving behind in the wake of progress?

Drive the large BMW.

You won't only be doing yourself a favour, but also the environment we all share. Have a quiet word with your BMW dealer. Or, at the very least, contact us for further information.

That is why American doves refused to believe the story of the Krasnoversk rader. It had to be a concoction of right-wing extremists bent on running traditional arms control doctrine. Doves preferred the Russian explanation: just listening to messages from space. That is also why some of as hard-liners have been hitting the Krasnoyarsk violation hard. The Nixon-Brezhoev deal allows "early warning" radars on the pen-phery of mutual defenses, but only one local defense against missiles. The Soviets chose to build a local defense around Moscow; America chose to build none. The Soviets' permitted system includes a battle-manent radar to plot the trajectories of hundreds of incoming missiles si-multaneously, thus enabling ground-based missiles to shoot them down. Now here is the rub: The building in Krasnoyarsk is the same, in size and signals, as the radar installation near Moscow that the Russians freely assert is designed to target incoming ICBMs. (Rassian technocrats stick to one set of plans.) The only real difference is that the radar at Krasnoyarsk is a treaty violation. It means that the Russians are putting a rudimentary national missile defense in place. In other words, they may have al-ready begun to deploy a ground-based defense against missiles in their re-entry stage - while complaining about prospective U.S. testing of a space-based defense against missiles in their launch stage.

At this point, with a summit ap-proaching and the blatant Krasnoyarsk violation making their antidefense argument untenable, the Russians could (a) admit the violation and shut it down. (b) admit nothing but dismantle their illegal radar, (c) wreck their attack on the U.S.

space defense plan by doing nothing. Mikhail Gorbachev chose a bolder fourth course: He offers to "stop building his defenses at Krasnoyarsk (outside, that is; inside, the electronic work goes on) in return for abandonment of U.S. plans to up. grade a couple of early warning radars that the treaty permits.

Talk about chutzpah. We'll hold our violation at its present level, he says, but you have to pay for it.
True to form, American MADmen embrace this cynical ploy as evidence of his conciliation, and promptly cast suspicion on modernizing America's peripheral early warning system.

Don't be fooled. The Krasnoyarsk radar defense is evidence of the Soviet drive to put a national ABM system in place. It proves that Mr. Gorbachev does not care whether his treary-breaking stand is exposed. Mr. Reagan is duty bound to insist on complete dismantling at Krasno-yarst before talks on limiting deployment of other defenses can start. The New York Times.

Alfonsín vs. Regression

Argentina's democratic government is once again under attack from violent and unreconciled supporters of the military junta that collapsed two years ago. The current epidemic of bombings is apparently not designed solely to disrupt the congressional elections next Sunday. The bombers are trying to prove that democracy will not work and that, to restore order and security. Argentina will have to return to the previous style of authority.

Until last spring, friends of the junta could hope that inflation would do their work for them, President Raul Alfonsin was following a cautious and hesitant economic policy that was proving increasingly ineffectual. By late spring the economy was sliding toward hyperinflation, an experience that democracies rarely survive. But in June the Alfonsin administration imposed a totally different and more drastic plan that has so far proved extraordinarily effective. The inflation rate fell from 31 percent a month in June to 6 percent in July and 2 percent in September, as industrial production began to rise again. Meanwhile, the government had brought to trial time generals and admirals of the former junta, and throughout the summer there was an outpouring of testimony describing the violations of human rights under their rule. It is a remarkable case, for three of the defendants would be able to prosecute these men. But the trial is now concluded and a verdict is expected shortly. The bombings this month are a response to the successes of a popular government, not to its failures. Because the junta's friends find themselves more isolated than ever, they have resorted to the tactics of terror,

The government arrested a dozen prominent suspects last week, but a disagreement arose among the courts over its authority to hold them. As judges began to free some. Mr. Alfonsin imposed the state of siege - suspending certain civil liberties - for 60 days. He is presiding over a country badly shaken by the savagely divisive and destructive politics of the past generation, and in many Argen-tines' minds the basic question is whether it can be ruled by any instrument other than the gun. Mr. Alfonsin stands for a better alternative, but he has felt himself compelled to take a step backward. His defenders can point out that none of the government's extraordinary powers are being used to interfere with the election campaigning. It is always dismaying to see an expedient like a state of siege invoked, but Mr. Alfonsin has earned a presumption that he is proceeding in good faith. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

Milked by Supercows?

the way. Within a few years it will be possible for farmers to feed herds a cheap, apparently harmless natural hormone that increases milk production by as much as 40 percent. To a world entranced by progress and bedeviled by hunger, that surely sounds like good news. If the supercow were a new computer or chain saw, she would be cheered by all. Competition would force producers to pass on savings to consumers, lowering prices and raising living standards. But because of the powerful dairy lobby, the prices for fluid milk and milk solids are set by Congress, not by the free market. Abundance is an embarrassment to be hidden, or sometimes, in the case of cows, slaughtered. If history is any guide, the windfall from bovine growth hormone will go to wealthy, efficient dairy farmers - and the contractors who build warehouses to store government surplus butter and choese.

Generally, costs and demand determine price. Innovations that lower costs make production more profitable at existing prices, thereby stimulating output. Eventually, prices fall and less efficient producers are forced out.

Automated milking, selective breeding and scientific feeding methods have increased yields dramatically. In 1960 it took an hour of labor to produce 120 pounds (54.4 kilograms) of milk: in 1980 an hour yielded 480 pounds. In 1950 the average cow produced 5.300. pounds of milk: today it is close to 13,000.

Much of the gain, however, has been denied

According to researchers at Cornell University in Ithaca, New York, the supercow is on port of low-cost fresh milk from California and the Midwest to the high-cost South. The Feds set a minimum nationwide price for butter, dry milk and processed cheese. The goverament is obliged to buy any surplus: the current surplus is about 10 percent of output. The program serves the interests of most dairy farmers. Small, inefficient producers eke out a modest living. Large, efficient dairy farmers clean up. But the farmers' gain is far exceeded by the loss to consumers and taxpayers. How is supercow likely to fit in? At first, surpluses will increase sharply as farmers find it more profitable to produce milk at the government's minimum price. The dairy lobby has known for some years that the mountains of surplus butter and cheese offend the public more than higher prices at the dairy case. So it has convinced Congress to offer cash incentives to farmers who slaughter their herds. As supercows come on line, there will be pressure for an ever larger "diversion" program financed by the Treasury and consumers. The future, then, is all too likely to resemble the past. A decade from now, inefficient dairy farmers will still rise at dawn, muttering about how hard they work to earn so little. Spokesmen for their rich, efficient neighbors will still be issuing press releases about what a bargain milk is - and still be mailing campaign checks to their congressmen to make sure it stays that way. Unless citizens rise up against this special interest, the course of progress is easy to project: supercow, supersurplus, superhandout. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Other Opinion More Missiles Instead of Fewer

In a BBC interview aired on Wednesday. President Reagan was asked about "star wars."] If we come up with this "defensive weapon," said the president, then "we go to the world, to our allies, to the Soviet Union" and we say "let's have the world have this for their own protection so that we can all eliminate our nuclear arsenals." But there is, solemply, no senior figure in his administration who could recite this with a straight face. It is rubbish: actual, scientific rubbish — for as far as the laboratory toilers can see. If and when a variant of the SDI eventually comes into being, long after this president and all his sharing pledges have cantered away into the West, it may provide areas of constrained defense around America's own missile sites and, perhaps, around some key cities. There will be no defense for Europe, say, against cruise missiles. Nor will there be any guaranteed defense for ordinary Americans scattered across that continent. And in the meantime the inevitable response for a Soviet Union worried by the SDI is to argue that [it] can only be breached by sheer weight of warheads, and that therefore more missiles must be built here and now and into the immediate future.

Preventive Strategic Medicine

Dwight D. Eisenhower, in his last year as president, predicted that sooner or later people [were] going to demand peace. Two decades later his words helped inspire the founders of International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War. Now the IPPNW has won the Nobel Peace Prize. Its membership has grown from six to 145,000 in 40 countries. The growth is phenomenal. Reognition by the Nobel committee is deserved. If only the politicians in Moscow and Washington were also to recognize that it is possible to transcend political and cultural differences and inject preventive medicine into the nuclear threat.

Tobacco in the Third World

The problem in Malaysia, as in many developing nations, is tobacco's importance to the livelihoods of many poor people. The issue is politically sensitive, so the government must tackle it on a long-term basis. But moving too slowly would allow time for vested interests to become even more entrenched. These include powerful multinationals turning to Third World markets in the face of declining consumption in the developed world.

More people in developed countries are choosing not to smoke. Recent U.S. studies show that the smoking rate is much lower among people with higher social status people who tend to be better educated and more likely to be concerned with health. The less advantaged may not have the same information or ability to choose. If fewer Ma-laysians are to be included in this group, efforts to promote economic development and alleviate poverty must be part of the campaigo against the habit of smoking. - The Business Times (Kuala Lumpur).

Shultz Will Take Summit Cues Back From Moscow

WASHINGTON — President Reagan will celebrate the first anniversary of his re-election on Nov. A couple of days earlier, Secretary of State George Shultz will be in Moscow to set the agenda for the Reagan-Gorbachev summit meeting in Geneva on Nov. 19 and 20 - a conference that could have an important bearing on the historical record of the Reagan presidency. Nobody expects the leaders of the two major nuclear powers to recon-cile the political and philosophic differences of 70 years in eight hours of alk, half of it devoted to translation. Mr. Shultz's assignment, as usual, is to keep things from getting worse than they already are. The question at Geneva is whether Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev will talk sense privately about their problems, or deliver more propaganda nonsense about their differences, Mr. Shultz is going to Moscow to try to define a practical agenda for future negotiations not only on arms control but on the easing of East-West tensions in general,

This is the sort of thing Mr. Shultz has done most of his professional life. As secretary of labor he tried to balance the conflicting demands of manBy James Reston agement and the unions. As secretary of the Treasury he watched the United States move from isolation and protectionism into the tangles of the first worldwide competing economy. He has worked in the academic

He has worked in the academic world and has a sense of history, and he has been in Washington long enough to know something about the stupidity of political and personal ambition. Accordingly, unlike many of his colleagues, he has few illusions about Moscow or Washington, or about the allies or about himself about the allies or about himself.

The chances are that he may make some progress in his talks with Mr. Gorbachev. Henry Kissinger may very well be right in saying that it is wrong to base hopes for peace or reconciliation with the Russians on the personality of new Soviet leaders, but occasionally even Henry has been wrong. Prime Ministers Margaret Thatcher of Britain and Yasuhiro Nakasone of Japan have the impression that Mr. Gorbachev has so many problems at home that he is demanding new policies there and considering compromises abroad. All this may be wrong - there is much evidence that it is - but Mr.

Shultz has a chance to analyze this for himself when he meets Mr. Gor-bachev, He can then tell Mr. Reagan whether to go to Geneva expecting the worst or hoping for the possibility of compromise, as the allies suggest. Such an approach to the summit meeting will not be popular with other members of the Reagan cabinet. particularly with Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, who thinks that past agreements with the Russians have been violated and doubts that any new agreements with them in the future would be useful. In recent weeks Mr. Reagan has seemed to side with Mr. Weinberger's pessimistic analysis. He went to the United Nations condemning Soviet expansionist policies in Europe, Africa and Latin America and suggesting that he could deal with Mr. Gorbachev only if Moscow agreed to aban-don its political and military interventions in regional disputes.

On this he had a valid point, for it is true that there can be no reconciliation between Washington and Moscow on the peace of the world as long as either side violates its treaty commitments under the United Nations

Charter, But Mr. Reagan seemed to be making the settlement of these regional disputes a condition for reaching an accommodation on the control of nuclear weapons. And on this point not only the allies but many of his own advisers disagree. They include Mr. Shultz, whose practical view, as usual, is that it is a bum idea to reject some progress unless you can get everything you want. The president may be coming around to accepting this approach to the summit. He has agreed to respond to Mr. Gorbachev's proposal for a 50-percent cut in some nuclear missiles and to his more hopeful proposal for a comprehensive test ban on all nuclear weapons systems.

And President Reagan is sending to Moscow not Mr. Weinberger but Mr. Shultz, to talk things over with General Secretary Gorbachev and see if at least they can arrange an agenda in Geneva that will minimize the propaganda and keep the negotiations going - not only on the con-trol of nuclear weapons but also on UN treaty commitments to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of other nations.

The New York Times:

Middle East: New Patterns in an Old Stalemate

PARIS — Is the Middle East, with its routine violence and its perpetual rounds of aborted peace initiatives, doomed to stalemate? For the first time in years, promising diplomatic, political and psychological patterns are emerging.

The Israeli bombing of PLO headquarters in Tunis, renewed Palestinian terrorism culminating in the hijacking of the Achille Lauro, the American capture of an Egyptian plane carrying the hijackers and the recent Soviet overture to ward Israel all suggest that the political configu-ration of the Middle East is changing.

The Palestinians are suffering the most from these shifts. The contrast between their hopes in 1974, when Yasser Arafat was addressing the United Nations, and their exclusion from that very same forum 11 years later is the best proof of the erosion of their movement's image.

Mr. Arafat is a prisoner of the PLO's contra-dictions, incapable of choosing between political moderation and physical violence. He is increasingly isolated and will survive only as long as the competing appetites of those who want to con-trol the PLO cancel each other out.

There are signs today of strains between the PLO and Jordan, and even between the PLO and Egypt; moderates in the Arab world find Mr. Arafat a growing embarrassment, with his ambiguities and his inability to pursue or impose a consistent line. More Arab countries today are seriously considering a PLO without Mr. Arafat -at a time when Israel is more than ever looking to Palestinian alternatives to the PLO.

By Dominique Moïsi

Tolerance for the PLO has apparently been reduced by a Rambo syndrome: The West is in a mood of backlash against Third World violence. There is growing impatience with Middle Eastern terrorism in particular. So a decade of leniency toward the PLO could be ending.

Public opinion in Europe has been heavily favorable to the American seizure of the Egyptian plane. More significant, European denunciations of the Israeli raid over Tunis were comparatively mild. Three years ago, amid revulsion after the Sabra and Chatila massacres in Lebanon, there would have been an uproar. As they savor the PLO's fall from grace, Israelis can also celebrate the gradual ending of their diplomatic isolation. From Africa and Eastern Europe - and even from Western Europe, with the planned establishment of formal diplomatic relations with Spain - the news for Israel has been good. Especially symbolic is the resumption. of cultural ties between Israel and Poland - an interesting sign of new inventiveness in Soviet diplomacy under Mikhail Gorbachev. By allowing Poland to resume some kind of elationship with Israel, the Soviets killed two birds with one stone: They promoted increased recognition for Wojciech Jaruzelski's regime, and they sent positive signals to the Israelis.

immediate domestic purposes with the raid over Tunis, but in the process they played dangerously with Egypt, their chief asset in the region. Israel may have endangered seven years of peace with Egypt by unnecessarily exposing the Hosni Mubarak regime to its own inner weaknesses.

While the state of Israel recovers lost diplomatic recognition, its citizens are being exposed to a new form of hatred and violence that extends abroad to all Jews. Anti-Jewish terrorism expresses the desperation of the Palestinians and growing radicalization in the Arab world under the influence of revolutionary Islam.

And that tendency is met in Israel by increasing receptivity to the racist theories of Meir hane, which signal a crisis of moral values. Developments in the relationship between the Palestinians and Israel are not necessarily a zerosum game. The Palestinians' loss will not necessarily turn out to be Israel's gain As the South African drama unfolds, Israelis can see a vivid example of what could happen to them if they were so freeze the situation in the occupied territories as it is today.

If it is to capitalize on diplomatic gains, exploit an extended margin of maneuver and present successfully at home an alternative of peace to Kahanism, the government of Shimon Peres will need determination and courage.

More Than Food Crosses the Ethiopian Aid Bridge

HANOVER. New Hampshire —
A year ago this week the United States began large-scale emergency feeding of Ethiopia. The food aid has created a fragile bridge between the two antagonists — a Soviet client state controlled by a Marxist, and the world's richest capitalist nation, led by an outspoken anti-Communist.

Ethiopia continues to need emer-gency aid, and the United States remains the primary donor. The mutual linkage, which has made possible some repairs in relations, is all the more remarkable because neither side wanted to join the other in com-bating the famine. That linkage reflects President Reagan's new, more pragmatic policy toward Ethiopia.
The government of Lieutenant Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam has never publicly welcomed the aid from Western countries. It did not cooperate for much of this past year. Colo-nel Mengistu delayed unloading retief food at his principal port and prevented it from reaching starving peasants in the guerrilla-held prov-inces of Wollo, Tigre and Extrea. He deprived countrymen of food by forcing them from relief camps and brutally resettling them in the south.

The Reagan administration had twice deliberately delayed — for up to 10 months - requests for emergency food from private American relief agencies inside Ethiopia. Vowing never to feed a Marxist nation, the administration tried to cut the 1984 budget for emergency food aid to Ethiopia from 8,170 metric tons to zero, despite warnings that some 25 million Ethiopians were starving.

However, prodded partly by election politics and partly by photo-graphs of skeletal, starving children. the administration started feeding Ethiopia. In two months, food deliveries jumped from 45,000 to 332,000 metric tons. Today, American assis-tance includes trucks, planes, medical supplies, tents and other disaster aid, and 550,000 metric tons of food. Ethiopia recently asked for 1.6 milBy Jack Shepherd hon metric tons of food in 1986. It is Mengistu began in September allowlikely to get it. While rainfall is easing the food crisis across much of sub-Saharan Africa, five countries will need emergency food throughout the coming year. Ethiopia heads the list, the others being Angola, Botswana, Mozambique and Sudan.

Small changes between Ethiopia and America bear watching for what they may portend. For example, reworkers, medical specialists and other aid technicians report an openness and friendliness among Ethiopian counterparts. Ethiopians are finding employment in relief operations. After a year of quiet negotiations, first begun by Representative Jim Wright of Texas and then pressed by Vice President George Bush, Colonel ing relief agencies to get food to peo-ple in Tigre, Wollo and Eritrea. That food is going to some two million people trapped by guerrilla fighting who have not received any food before. It may also help stem the flow of refugees into relief camps in Sudan. The Reagan administration is using the aid as an instrument to press ing the aid as an instrument to press home several foreign policy argu-ments. It is urging Colonel Mengistra to increase Ethiopia's efforts to con-trol famine, to reduce the pace of forced resettlement and to evacuate the relief camps more humanely by enabling the hungry to return to their villages and to farming.

Washington is also using the aid to make clear to the Ethiopians that America is their true benefactor, Mr. Bush reminded Addis Ababa that while the United States is donating almost 600,000 metric tons of food the Soviet Union - which has sold Ethiopia $2.5 billion in military aid has sent merely 10,000 metric tons. It will take more than food aid to repair the relationship, of course. Mr. Reagan and Colonel Mengistn remain at odds. Soviet influence has not diminished. But the aid bridge, so carefully put into place, enables both nations to span their ideological chasm and to settle into a relationship that, while nettlesome, might improve further, to mutual benefit.

out oil for special treatment, rather than any other category of imports. Oil revenues have simply been the enabling factor behind aid from OPEC members. So it was inevitable that the drastic fall in oil incomes in recent years would have an effect on aid programs of OPEC members. The allegation that OPEC members' aid to Africa and Asia has "differed little" from Western aid cannot be supported by the facts. It is still vastly more generous. According to OECD statistics, net disbursements of official development aid from OPEC members in 1983 and 1984 averaged 0.95 percent of GNP, compared with 0.36 percent from OECD countries. The total GNP of the OPEC group in 1984 represented only 273 percent of the GNP of the EC countries and 16.8 percent of the GNP of the United States. These figures do not take account of two important factors. Aid from OPEC members originates in developing countries and does not stem from a renewable annual income, as in the case of industrialized donors, but from depletion of a resource that represents capital. Secondly, it is totally untied to the geopolitical or commercial interests of the donors and gives priority to the development needs of the poorest countries as identified by beneficiary governments. Furthermore, a significant part of this aid finances goods and services obtained from industrialized countries. These are all unique features of aid from OPEC members.

The OPEC countries cannot be blamed for the lack of progress in creating alternative development and financial institutions geared to Third World needs." They have already agreed to finance 40 percent of the replenishment needs of the Inter-national Fund for Agricultural De-velopment. The United States has refused to join other OECD nations in meeting the remaining 60 percent.

In view of the limits to OPEC members' resources, is it surprising that the OPEC Fund concentrates on allocating aid where it appears most needed and most effective, rather than pursue ambitious targets that require the cooperation of industrialized countries, which may or may not materialize? The OPEC members nevertheless still stand resolutely behind their existing commitments.

As an American with more than 20 years' association with the Arab world. I could not agree more with Willet Weeks's assessment of recent U.S. activity in the Mediterranean ("An Erratic U.S. Hurts Its Allies." Oct. 28). America has become so obsessed with not wanting to appear impotent in the eyes of the world that it is reduced to acting like an adolescent builty. The Associated Presi

BEIRUT - Prime Minister Rashid Karami pledged: Thursday that his government would work to free U.S., British and French hostages in Lebanon after three Russians were freed unharmed after 30 days in captivity.

The Soviet charge d'affaires, Yuri Suslikov, said outside his embassy that none of the men "had any scars or bruises to indicate they had been physically mistreated during captivity."

He said the three, who were released Wednesday night, were tired and under the supervision of a physician."

He said they had not yet been debriefed about their captors because of their physical condition. Mr. Suslikov, the senior Soviet diplomat in Beirut, said he visited President Amin Gemayel at his suburban Baabda palace, east of Beirut, on Thursday "to extend our thanks and appreciation for all the assistance we received to secure the release of our personnel."

He also visited Defense Minister

Abdel Usayran to express Soviet appreciation for his help.

Asked why he thought the Russians were released while 11 Westchicken has a say erners were still being held, Mr. Suslikov said: "Maybe it's because we have many friends in Lebanon and Syria."

Mr. Karami said: "We are happy that they have been released. We hope that all other hostages will be freed in the near future."

Asked whether his government was trying to secure their release, Mr. Karami said, "There is no doubt that the government is carrying out its duties with various parties involved in the case of releasing all the hostages."

A police spokesman said the three Russians were driven to a crossroads about 100 yards (90 meters) from the embassy's main gate and freed.

He said that the Russians, in track suits, walked barefoot into the embassy.

Rajiv Gandhi Elected Members Join Hong Kong Council Leads India In Homage To Mother

NEW DELHI - Prime Minister Rajas Gandhi led hundreds of thousands of Indians on Thursday in paying homage to his mother on the first anniversary of her assassination, while Sikh militants in Punjab landed her killers.

The nation observed "National Integration Day" in memory of Indira Gandhi, who was gunned down by two Sikh bodyguards at her home last Oct. 31. The assassination plunged India into its worst sectorian violence since independence in 1947.

This attack, and warnings from resident Chinese Communist officials that further political developments must match Beijing's blueprint for Hong Kong, have cast a shadow over the evolution of a political system here. Some political optimists saw the 64 candidates running for 24 seats in the newly expanded Legislative Council as a measure of how fast political attitudes can be awakened. For many years, the assumption that Hong Kong people were emerged in China during the late apolitical, seeking only to profit 18th century and has continued to from the territory's impressive economic growth, had stood unchal-

Under the new electoral system, however, only 0.5 percent of the territory's population was eligible to vote for the council's elected seats. Under an electoral college system, they voted for candidates from their geographical or professional constituencies.

Beijing has guaranteed Britain that it will leave Hong Kong's capi-talist system alone for 50 years after 1997. But many community activists and officials say they fear that the absence of a democratic system would allow Communist interests to fill any power vacuum created by Britain's departure.

Anti-Suharto Speech Cheered at Jakarta Trial

JAKARTA - Hundreds cheered and applicated at a court Thursday when a leading Indone-sian dissident accused President Suharto of breaking a pledge to govern the nation constitutionally. Ali Sadikin, a retired general and former governor of Jakarta, who was testifying at the subversion trial of another retired general and close friend, Harrono Dharsono, said Mr. Subarto had failed to keep his promise after 18 years in power.

Mr. Dharsono has been charged with writing a document with other dissidents, including Mr. Sadikin, that the prosecution charges was aimed at toppling the government. Diplomatic observers said the trial offered a rare platform for criticism of the military-backed Suharto government.

The document in question gave a dissident account of an incident Sept. 12 in a poor section of north protesters stirred by fiery Islamic sermons critical of Mr. Suharto.

Mr. Sadikin, who called the cocument mild, told the court that reports he received said the number of casualties was higher than the official figure. He said he had a list of 50 people believed to have been missing since the demonstration

He said accounts by witnesses had shown that troops wildly opened fire into the crowd that army trucks had run over the dead and injured, and that corpses were taken away in army trucks. The document had sought an indepen-Jakarta, where troops clashed with dent investigation of the protest.

Flying on via Switzerland is very easy.

But also very hard.

Our timetable shows in impressive fashion just how attractive Switzerland is. With extremely short transit times and excellent connections in Geneva and Zurich, Swissair makes it thoroughly easy for its passengers to fly on to 44 European cities or to Africa, Asia, North and South America. And what happens? Instead of the short stopover, many passengers prefer a slightly longer stay in Switzerland with its almost unlimited possibilities. A sure sign that the land of Swissair, apart from being unusually well located, is also an unusually beautiful turntable for journeys to Europe and overseas. swissair 🛒

Arms Study Says U.S., Soviet Prepare Major Deployments

LONDON - The United States and the Soviet Union have laid the groundwork in the past year for the deployment of new and deadlier nuclear systems, the International Institute for Strategic Studies concluded Friday in its annual review. The London-based institute said that, while there have been no dramatic changes in the past year in the deployed nuclear weapon systems on either side, both superpowers will be deploying new systems over the next few years while improving the weapons first deployed in the 1970s and early 1980s.

While the U.S. defense secretary, Caspar W. Weinberger, said recently that the Soviet Union had deployed mobile SS-25 missiles. the institute added information on a second mobile missile, the SS-24. The SS-24 also is reportedly close to deployment in silos and then possibly in mobile launchers. The institute said there was a 37-percent increase in the number of Soviet strategic nuclear warheads over the past three years compared to a 10-percent increase in U.S. warheads. The United States is estimated to have 10.174 strategic nuclear warheads with an estimated yield of 3.625 megatons. The Soviet Union has at least 9.987 warheads yielding about 5.837 megatons.

New U.S. Arms Proposal Is Expected

sources said, Meanwhile, administration officials said that the Soviet Union, in a recent informal discussion at Geneva, suggested an agreement on intermediate-range nuclear missiles that included as a first step a freeze, beginning Dec. 1. on U.S. and Soviet forces now in the field. The next stage of the Soviet plan, covering a period of 18 months, would involve a reduction in the number of U.S. single-warhead cruise missiles deployed in Western Europe to between 100 and 120, and the removal of U.S. Pershing-2 missiles based in West Germany. The Russians then would reduce their triple-warhead SS-20 medium-range missile force in Europe so that they had the same number of warheads on their SS-20s as did the remaining U.S. cruise missiles together with British and French missile forces.

Mr. Gorbachev said early in October that the Soviet Union was reducing the number of SS-20s in Lubbers Rejects Delay Europe to 243, and proposed to freeze the remaining SS-20s in

The Soviet leader did not specify from what level the reductions would be figured, but there are believed to be about 300 SS-20s in Europe. The United States plans to deploy 464 ground-launched cruise missiles and 108 Pershing-2 missiles, for a total of 572 missiles.

Most of the Pershing-2s already are deployed. More than 128 ground-launched cruise missiles

The primary U.S. objection to the Soviet proposal has been that it counted medium-range missiles deployed by the United States in Western Europe, including bombs on fighter-bombers, as "strategic" weapons. The U.S. response will eliminate all medium-range weapons from the count of strategic missiles, officials said,

By the U.S. estimate of strategic weapons, the Russians have 6,400 land-based missile warheads and 2.500 submarine warheads compared with 2,130 land-based and

Prime Minister Rund Lubbers said Thursday he had rejected an invitation by the Soviet authorities to discuss the projected deploy-ment of cruise missiles in the Netherlands, The Associated Press reported from The Hague. The Soviet invitation included as a condition a postponement of a government decision on deployment of cruise missiles. Friday's decision is expected to be in favor of deployment of the 48 North Atlantic Treaty Organization medium-range missiles in 1988. Mr. Lubbers told Parliament that he had received a cable signed by his Soviet counterpart. Nikolai I. Ryzhkov, inviting him for talks anywhere.

"It would not be right to postpone the decision once more," Mr. Lubbers said, "and so it would not be right to accept the invitation."

The culturification of cooking began last rebruary when Lang and Michel Rocard, the minister of agriculture who has since resigned, commissioned the journalist and author Jean Ferniot to write a report on the present and future of cooking and the food the hashilite.

Fermiot, 67, has for a long time been a restaurant critic and he has the sleek, contented air of a cat who has often supped on tented air of a cat who has often supped on exquisitely prepared canaries. His second wife, in an attempt to efficiently eradicate their social obligations, once scheduled five days, each with the same food and wines. By harner point; the third Wednesday Ferniot was distinctly Tall the le testy. His third and present wife has, he says, has the bar that hand at classic regional cuisine.

Fernior certainly agrees with Jack Lang that cooking is an art — perhaps the greatest

Some people consecutive painting or to music, but to me cooking painting or to music, but to me cooking painting or to music, but to me cooking and the water surpasses the other arts because it involves each one of our senses and also it is convivcontrol of the master to make or look at a painting alone, but we gather to enjoy a meal."

niot added, "cooking is an art in the full meaning of the word. . . . More than the others, it is popular, democratic. One must eat each day while one need not gaze upon a painting or listen to a concerto every 24 the Lascaux caves."

Man certainly did. But it is not the past that concerns Ferniot. The present need, he says, is to promote French cooking throughout the world - which would also give an economic hype to such ancillary industries ias table lineus, china and glassware, wines and prepared foods - and to give young chefs a training suited to modern times. This includes studies in such fields as marketing, promotion and nutrition. True, the present generation of globetrotting French cooking stars — Guerard, Verge, Troisgros, Bocuse - seemed to need no tuition in marketing or public relations but Ferniot says that like Monsieur Jourdain's speaking prose, they were practicing advanced selling techniques without knowing

The new chel will be open to modern ects such as microwave ovens and frozen fish which, says Ferniot, can be as good or better than fresh. Nor should the new chef or anyone else be snippy about fast foods since they do not compete with haute cuisine. Says Ferniot, "One can eat fast food at noon and have a three-star meal at night."

Many of Ferniot's ideas are directed toward exporting: At present mostly raw food and agricultural materials are exported and he would like to see an increase in finished products as well. One might think this would have more to do with the Ministry of Trade than Culture, but, says Ferniot with a shrug, if Culture is interested he is pleased because it is better than nothing. He is also trying to get private manufac-turers involved in events that would showcase French products, perhaps creating a permanent center along the lines of the South Street Seaport in New York.

"Our biggest success," he says, "will come on the day when we can say a French wine really can only be properly savored in French-made glass."

As for the state of French cooking today, nonvelle cuisine may be beautiful but is it art? Definitely, says Ferniot, and it shows the curiosity and vigor of French invention in that its chefs took inspiration from the Orient and Italy and created something of their own. His own taste runs more to traditional dishes, and the quality of French procuce, he says, has never been better.

"I remember when cheese had worms, wine would often be off and fruits rotten," he says. To those who complain that today's bread and butter don't taste as they used to, he replies that this is an age-old lament and that in 1854 someone named Alexis de la Colombière stated in an official report on food frauds that "Roquefort cheese isn't what it used to be. It is a poor imitation often filled out with starch, cereals and even potato and moldy bread crumbs." It is an amiable idea to proclaim that cooking is an art — and it is certainly better than chewing over the question of what art is - but Jack Lang's proclamation seems at odds with a view of France stated by the late President Georges Pompidou and repeated by the present government: that the nation should be renowned for its technology rather than for the quality of its cheese. Doesn't Jean Ferniot think that his plan will reinforce the old view of the French as pleasantly backward people who only care

"No," he says, "because the people who say that still come here to eat."

Horowitz Comes Back Once Again

by David Stevens

ARIS - Visdimir Horowitz, who may very well be the last of the oldfashioned virtuosos and pianistic superstars, is back on the concern stage again, and Europe has him - at least for a series of four recitals here and in Milan. He is here in the flesh, that is. But while he is giving his concerts in person, last Saturday and tomorrow at 3:30 P.M. at the Theatre des Champs-Elysées here and the afternoons of Nov. 17 and 24 at the Teatro alla Scala in Milan, he will also be available at Carnegie Hall on the evening of Nov. 15 in filmed

The film, in stereo digital sound, was made earlier this year in the pianist's town house on Manhattan's Upper East Side. It is a combination of a recital and what the ads call an "intimate evening" with Horowitz and his wife, Wanda, a daughter of Arturo Toscanini. The idea of a pianist using modern technology to take over a concert hall without actually appearing on stage probably makes history of some sort — and it is probably fitting that it is Horowitz who is the subject of this trans-Atlantic bit of show

The concert played on the film, incidentally, will also be issued as a recording by the firm Deutsche Grammophon, with whom Horowitz recently signed a recording con-

Tickets for the first concert last Saturday did not exactly sell like hotcakes. Perhaps this was because the public was apprehensive that Horowitz, at 82, would not live up to his legend, or because he is familiar here almost exclusively through recordings, or because of negative reports of his last emergence from retirement a couple of years ago, or because Saturday afternoon is an unfamiliar hour for concertgoers, or because of a price scale up to 1,100 francs (about $137 — the film at Carnegie Hall has a $7.50 top). Nevertheless, the Theatre des Champs-Elysées was packed when - 34 years to the day since his last Paris concert, and on the same stage — Horowitz emerged carefully from the wings and showed that he could

A little more than two hours later, when after two brief encores Horowitz came out and closed the piano lid and keyboard cover, the prolonged ovation was hardly less sonorous. "I have young tingers," he was quoted as saying earlier this year, and he had proved

by Donal Henahan

EW YORK — The death the other day of Emil Gilels, a few days short of his 69th birthday, has further thinned the ranks of an elite group of Soviet virtuosos who broke onto the international scene after World

Of the three acknowledged leaders of that group, only his fellow pianist Sviatoslav Richter, still active at age 71, is left, the legendary violinist David Oistrakh having died in 1974. The old guard of Soviet music is passing and the new guard, if there is one, is slow in taking shape.

When the truce in the Cold War was declared in the 1950s, the Soviet Union led with its three aces, beginning by sending Gilels, who was already greatly admired in musical circles as the result of occasional appearances in Europe and from a few highly regarded Soviet recordings. Anticipation therefore ran high when he made his Ameri-can debut in Philadelphia with the Philadelphia Orchestra on Oct. 3, 1955, playing the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerno in B-flat minor, a performance he repeated the next night in Carnegie Hall. Shortly thereafter he recorded the same concerto with the Chicago

Symphony Orchestra under Fritz Reiner. It is difficult now to conjure up the mood of public euphoria that existed at that time. With Sol Hurok, the last of the impresarios, working wonders as a cultural intermediary, the long-dammed reservoir of Soviet artists man, felt the Soviet pianist lacked intimate knowledge of the score.

It may be worth remembering, of course, that other renowned soloists, including Jascha Heisetz and Arthur Rubinstein, were similarly felt not to measure up to the Reiner standard of musicmaking.

As the years went on, Gileis returned to the United States often and either his sophistication grew or his critics did. The playing was heard to take on extraordinary finish and nuance of tone. He continued to please audiences with the big, splashy pieces such as the Tchaikovsky and Brahms concertos. but he also came to play Schubert and Moalways took one by surprise.

Compared to his colleague Richter, Gilels was more predictable and in some ways less fascinating as an artist. Richter has always impressed me as the introvert the deep searcher, the pianist who is less concerned with playing all the notes in sequence than in being a great poet, whereas Gilels generally left the impression that he enjoyed above all being a great pianist. And yet, like any true musician, Gilels defied easy pigeonholing. In his playing he could be a sensation seeker, as in the Paganini Variations of Brahms, but then he might take up Mozart and be as reticent and self-effacing as a monk. One moment a performance could be alive with crackling intensity, the next all urbane charm. I have vivid recollections of Gilels recitals in which two different pianists might have been performing. One was in 197 when he played Schumann's "Carnaval" in as brusque and unfeeling a manner as you could imagine and then returned after interously, and hyperbole was the response of most critics. A few prominent critics, however, lodged complaints about certain aspects noff and Scriabin that were technically stun-nical prowess, they found fault with his mu-sical taste and noted a lack of sophistication in his interpretations. In fact, when he re-York for six years but suddenly showed up in corded with the Chicago Symphony, there midseason, on short warning, for a Carnegie was some friction in rehearsals because Rei-Hall recital. For much of the program he was ner, a famously punctilious and irascible in a mood to hammer away impressively in his big virtuoso style, but my keenest memory is of some finely wrought small pieces of Brahms. He kept one guessing.

In spite of his cautious speech and stiff manners, he was not, I think, an entirely inscrutable person. I met him only once, just before his 1977 recital here.

Wicked speculation had been going around at the time that his pride was injured by the attention being lavished on other Soviet pianists, Lazar Berman in particular, and that he wanted to reclaim his New York title from the contenders. In his interview, Gileis expressed astonishment that anyone would impute such a motive to him, but then mimed, off-the-record putdown of Berman.

Gilels was a typical Soviet artist of his time in that he played his cards extremely close to the vest when dealing with the Western press. By the time of the aforementioned interview, he understood English quite well and spoke it confidently. In addition to his linguistic aides, his interview entourage included his wife, his daughter and two American press agents.

ART of Gilels's caution and suspicion no doubt stemmed from his precarious position as a Jew and an honored Soviet artist in a period of great tension for Soviet Jews, Like both Oistrakh and Richter. he was from Odessa, a city that once had one of the largest Jewish populations in the Soviet Union and traditionally was the cultural center of the Ukraine.

It is an area that also produced Sol Hurok. which must have helped to cement his special relationship with the three foremost Soviet musicians. In the 1960s, when disruptions of American concerts by the Jewish Defense League and other groups were a constant threat, all Soviet performers came to be apprehensive. Some, including Richter, were clearly terrified. After one particularly bad experience in 1970 - a duo recital with David Oistrakh that was interrupted by protesters who stormed up the aisles yelling anti-Soviet slogans and climbed onto the stage before being wrestled down by security guards — he stopped coming altogether. He has not been heard in New York since.

The defections of Soviet artists, which began when Rudolf Nureyev jumped the ship in Paris in 1961, laid all touring Soviet performers under suspicion and particularly increased the tension under which Gilels and his Jewish colleagues had to function. However, unlike such subsequently disenchanted artists as Alexander Solzhenitsyn, Mikhail Baryshnikov, Alexander Godunov, Natalia Makarova, Kiril Kondrashin, Vladimir Ashkenazy, Maxim Shostakovich. Mstislav Ro-stropovich and Galina Vishnevskaya, Gilels obviously never found life in his native land so intolerable that he found it necessary to give up his special status and privileges as a hero of Soviet art.

And now the postwar heroes of Soviet art are just about gone. After Gilels and Richter, for instance, who will be nominated to carry the banner of Soviet planism? Ashkenazy was the most likely candidate at one time, but he long ago chose to live abroad, as did Bella Davidovich and Youri Egorov, Berman, still only 55 years old, is certainly young enough, but his reputation has slipped considerably in recent years. That leaves a cadre of comparative youngsters led by Andrei Gavrilov and Alexander Toradze, each of whom has adherents though neither has yet begun to acquire the prestige of their

Idly however. I wonder what would be our caction to these two superb young planists if they had been sequestered for 20 years and all we knew of them was hearsay and what could be gleaned from poorly made or pirated engines take over? Might they not be welcomed as if they were Gilels and Richter reincarnated? To find out we might need another World War and Cold War, and I imagine even piano buffs would think that a high price to pay.

Robert Wilson and the Importance of Silences

by Margaret Croyden

TEW YORK - At the Brooklyn Academy of Music, Robert Wil-son is watching a run-through of his new play. The set is up, the lights are up, the actors are in costume. From the proscenium hangs a scrim embroidered in gold with the name of the play: "The Golden Windows." On a raked stage, a dead man, noose around his neck, is suspended in space. Behind him stands a black house resembling a sentry box, with a shaft of light plaring through the slightly open door. Lying downstage and looking up at the corpse is a girl draped in white.

The night is starry; the moon is high. An amplified voice whistles "A Bicycle Built for Two." After a long wait, the dead man speaks: "But it is time to withdraw. The actors are getting ready to begin. Maestro, the overture." The corpse disappears into the flies; an overture from John Gay's "Beggar's Opera" is heard, and "The Golden Windows" unfolds.

This work, which was written, directed and designed by Robert Wilson and was first presented in 1982 at the Munich Kammerspiele to unanimous critical acclaim, has just opened as part of the Next Wave Festival of the Brooklyn Academy, where Wilson's "Einstein on the Beach," an opera with music by Philip Glass, had a successful revival.

For many years, during which Wilson created 10 major stage pieces and numerous smaller ones (several sponsored by the blend of dreamlike collages and fragmented, slow-moving action - was appreciated mainly by avant-garde experimentalists and Until now, the 43-year-old Wilson, who was born in Texas, has worked almost exclusively in Europe, where he found enthusias-tic audiences and substantial funding for his large, epic works, and where he still has important commitments. In 1984 he completed "the CIVIL wars" (originally scheduled for the 1984 Olympic Arts Festival but canceled for lack of money), a nine-hour spectacle depicting personal and political discord. Sections of "the CIVIL wars" were performed in Europe and the United States, and the entire production is scheduled to be staged in Texas next fall.

Wilson, who in Europe is considered a theatrical genius, finally seems to be achieving broad artistic recognition in his native land. Some critics have predicted that he will become a major force in the revival of visual theater, which was in the ascendancy when his career began in the 1960s but was subsequently overtaken by traditional American

"The Golden Windows," though highly visual, is a departure from Wilson's virtually nonverbal and lengthy creations. It is composed of language integrated with image, sound and space, and is constructed with the classical unities in mind. It lasts less than two hours, there are only four characters, there is one set (black and white) and one time span - evening, midnight and early ated 10 major stage pieces and numerous morning. There are simple costumes desmaller ones (several sponsored by the signed by Christophe De Menil, and taped Brooklyn Academy), his theater work — a music and sound.

A STATE OF THE STA

Wilson has collaborated with an audio specialist, Hans Peter Kuhn, to create what he calls a "floating sound collage" in which sounds will reverberate all over the theater. The actors perform with body microphones their live voices are used in conjunction with their pretaped ones. All but one role is dou-

HE title "The Golden Windows" derives from a from fairy tale: A boy his perspective, has gold windows. When he draws nearer there is only a common farmhouse with ordinary windows. Later in the story, he sees a plain house, his own, which seems to have turned gold due to the light of the sun. The fable and the play share a similar image: A house's appearance changes with the change in time and perspec-

But the piece has no linear plot Wilson works like a poet using metaphors and symbols. Four unnamed people — a young girl and boy and an older man and woman, designated only by numbers in the text and distinguished by what they wear - move about and speak in non sequinirs. Sentences are piled on top of each other, ideas are dissociated and disordered. The characters seem to be remembering or re-enacting past relationships, but they and their motives remain enigmatic.

Perhaps Wilson is expressing the mystery of human behavior and perception, or questioning why people cannot communicate. Or he may be observing that memory is only a mass of discordant and disconnected images. But his admirers have been known to be less involved with the story and its meaning than with the painterly images that float before their eyes. And they tend to sense the characters' relationships not by their words but by what the images convey.

There are usually hints. Reminiscent of "Einstein on the Beach" and Wilson's earlier "Deafman's Glance." "The Golden Windows contains falling stars and rising moons, brooding lights and menacing shadows, ceremonial gestures and ominous movements, plus a coup de thèatre, the hallmark of a Wilson production. As in most of his work, images, often paradoxical, are arranged in geometrical and architectural patterns that the director believes will evoke highly textured surface and a subtle subtext.

If the meaning of Mr. Wilson's work strikes many people as obscure, the means by which he achieves his effects are clear. At rehearsals, which were held seven hours a day, six days a week on and off since June, Wilson, in jeans and cowboy boots, was surrounded by assistants, all of whom had worked with him in other productions.

In contrast to the dark, somber quality that many associate with his work, the director was thoroughly relaxed, jovial and full of humor. Unlike most directors, who demand privacy during rehearsals, he welcomed visitors. On any day such people as Susan Son-tag, Lucinda Childs and actors from his former productions could be seen wandering in and out. "The atmosphere was the best I ever experienced," said Gaby Rodgers, one of the cast members. Wilson is not like some other directors who act out their problems in rehearsals; he's completely warm and suportive."

At first the actors sat around a large table and read through the text, trying to make sense of it. Wilson asked them what they thought the play was about. Each gave an interpretation, and then he stated his own view: "As people talk, we have many starts and stops - this is how the script is. It's like watching television, like switching stations in midstream. This is how we think. The script is also like an edit that has gone astrav.

But, one actor asked, what is the story line? Exactly who are these people? Wilson remained silent.

"I don't tell the actors what the play is about," he later explained, "because each one has to discover it for himself. Then it is his or her character. I give them specific gestures and movements that don't necessarily relate to the text. Very often they are presented in contradiction to the spoken word. I very seldom interfere with their interpretations as long as I can ultimately draw my own conclusions from their performance. I have said many times that if you make a table, make it yourself, carve the wood, put it together, you have a different feeling for that table than if you buy it in the store. So I think that in this play you get certain materials — the words — and the actors have to mold them into something of their own. When they do that, they have a different feeling for the finished product . . .

As with all his works, Wilson prepared for this production by creating abstract blackand-white drawings that express the overall depth, shape and light of the piece. Then he drew on story boards the visual details of the action; this became the visual script. Next a script for the language was prepared, and finally, a script indicating the sound effects. As a result there were three scripts - the visual (including the lighting), the verbal and the aural. "Mostly the visual is the poetic expression of the verbal," he said, "but I can separate or harmonize or let the texts contradict each other, for the texts stand alone."

After two days of reading the manuscript, the actors rehearsed on their feet. Wilson

The cuts of beef are slightly different those elsewhere, but a bife de chorizo is similar to a strip steak; a lomo, filet mignon, and asado de tira are short ribs. The best starter is proveleta à la plancha, a thick piece of provo-lone cheese topped with oregano and served hot from the grill.

It is a Sunday tradition - the maid's day off - to go to the Costanera, a strip of restaurants along the River Plate, to enjoy an asado. There are many restaurants and most are good. A favorite among Argentines is Los Años Locos, where dinner for two with wine will come to about $18.

Other great places for an asado are La Mosca Blanca, near the Retiro Station (313-4890). Ligure, at Juncal 855 (393-0644), where the line always moves swiftly and one should finish dinner with the panqueque Lig-ure, a crèpe topped with sambayon, fruit and ice cream.

For something heartier, there is the Munich Restaurant, at Roberto M. Ortiz 1871 (44-39-81). The milanesas, breaded chicken and beef cutlets, are excellent, and are to Argentines what hamburgers are to Americans; a serving of milanesas with salad and wine usually costs less than $5.

Five-star hotel rates run from about $65 to $120 for a double, four-star from $50 to $70 and the three-star from $35 to $45 (the ratings are according to the hotels themselves).

choreographed the movements frame by frame, and the actors learned their parts by endless repetition. They had to be concerned with every detail, to memorize not only a complicated script but complicated movements as well. Actors in a Wilson produc-tion, said the assistant director, Julia Gillette. "have to be absolutely precise and have perfect attention." While the actors were learning their "business" and walking around, scripts in hand. Wilson would demonstrate the required movement or stand behind an actor to show him or her how to move. Or he would alter the placement of a hand, or a head or a shoulder,

"Hold your hands in your lap for 15 seconds," he directed one actor. "Walk to the chair in 15 seconds, turn your head in one second; put your hand down to the count of 15 seconds. . . . Try to be very still; don't move. The silences are just as beautiful as the text, so don't take a lot of time with the words. Don't show the audience too much. Listen to the text inside your head. Don't perform."

Timing is an essential factor in any Wilson piece, so much so that his assistants used stopwatches to cue the actors. Told how many minutes or seconds to hold their positions, when to turn their heads, when to pick up an object, how many minutes to laugh. the actors could leave no movement to chance. Wilson is interested in line, in architectural structure and in spatial arrangement. It is just as though "he were painting on stage," says his assistant

Might this create a problem with Stanislavsky-trained, or method, actors who try to find inner justification for their movements?

"Of course," Wilson answered, "actors want to know why they are doing this or that, and I always say. 'I don't know.' Every actor wants me to start with the cause, and most directors do start that way to get the effect. But I do the opposite. . . Some of the actors I worked with in Germany, the older actors, were more comfortable with my approach. In that sense they were ideal for my work. They weren't so involved with the Stanislavsky method. They came from the old school; they are great technicians; the director could give them the result and they would fill in . . . Theater today has be-come very psychological; actors want to in-terpret for the audience: they impose too much on the audience."

Wilson prefers a theater that allows distance, where the situation can be viewed in a more detatched way. "I think if you want to present something emotionally, and you have a constant outpouring of the emotions. the audience will do the opposite. They will not respond. . . Of course, we are not demanding that the audience all feel the same, that their response be the same. When responses vary, there is more space and more

One of the most important aspects of Wilson's aesthetics is the lighting, which he thinks through early in the planning process. but incorporates in the rehearsals last. His contract stipulates the time he will receive to work out the lighting for a show; for "The Golden Windows" that was 60 hours. The lighting design was firmly in his head when rehearsals began, so that he could direct the actors in accordance with where the light would fall.

When he actually lit the stage, he started with an overall light to set the basic mood and then used special light to focus on details — a hand, a finger, the nape of speck, the door or an object. It could take possible get the light just right on the fold of a dress. If an actor moved an inch from the assigne place, he or she might be in the dark "I light people, not sets or environments."

Wilson says, "but I think objects are just as important. I want audiences to see certain things. Lights add commentary to the visus text. just as music and voices on tape miderscore or contradict the verbal text. For example, there may be a glass of milk on sta I might allow the space around the milk to be entirely dark and light only the milk. People would listen to the text and watch the object. and in that way, the light becomes an acros. It creates a space, an image, a shape. Light has its own laws and its own texture. It can actually exist by itself. In fact, one can look at a theatrical piece as light show."

The effect aims to be deliberately mysterious. Wilson wants to surprise the annience and create what he calls a "technical beatty." which is "perfection in timing, in movement, in gesture, in line and in spatial arrangements. . To be really free one missification create the mechanical structure and then one is free to do whatever one wants within the structure. That's what Balanchare is all about in dance, and that's what Chaplin was all about that's what Kabuki and Japanese Noh is about. And that sort of thing is what I'm aiming for.

The SNCF is counting on a combination of speed, comfort, service and three-star cuisine rather than price, although this is a factor too when it comes to value for money. Paris-Strasbourg one-way by plane costs 575 francs (plus taxis); the Nouvelle Première is 442 francs (17 percent more than normal first) plus 200 to 300 francs for a meal, but then you've got to eat somewhere.

France's railway renaissance started in September 1981 when the TGVs (train à Che finite grande vitesse) were inaugurated on the Paris-Lyon service, covering the 265 miles (430 kilometers) in just two hours. Center to cen-- Ships land Rer Para faster than by air. SNCF says that the TGVs and the sales have captured 40 percent of the air traffic between the two cities, and that on the existing TGV network executives represent 45 Promo della percent of passengers compared with 35 per-THE LEADING STATES cent on regular trains.

Unlike the Trans-Europe Express and other huxury trains, the TGV is democratic. There are both first and second classes and and no tariff supplement for some trains.

Herein lies a problem. TGV passengers appland the speed but complain about the mediocre food and service. First class costs about 50 percent more than second, but there is almost no difference in comfort and amenities. As a result, many people are deserving first class for second.

The problem is even trains. Since the SNCF introduced its universally comfortable, air-conditioned Corail-type coaches in 1975, phasing out the c restaurant cars, its first-class traffic has fallen; total traffic has grown by 35 to 40 percent, but first class represents only about 18 percent compared with 25 percent 10 years ago. Some first-class passengers have switched to air travel, especially since the Airbus came into service:

The Nouvelle Première is an attempt to recapture disaffocted first-class passengers and build a new market among business travelers and opinion leaders (or an estimated two million bouseholds in France, 10 percent of the active population) who manifest a desire for standards of exclusivity, food and service at least comparable to those of the crack luxury trains of the 1960s.

According to an SNCF spokesman, the project has cost 12 million francs and will run for at least a year. The target is to increase first-class traffic by at least 10 percent on the Strasbourg run. It is being monitored by consumer research and if successful, the Nouvelle Première will be incorporated into the new TGV Atlantique service due to start in 1990 between Paris and Brest (trip time cut from 5 hours 42 minutes to 4 hours 16), Paris and Nantes (cut from 2 hours 53 minutes to 2 hours) and Paris to Bordeaux (cut from 4 hours to 2 hours 58 minutes). Future TGV extensions are Paris-Zurich (in 4 hours from 6 at present) and Paris-Frankfurt (in 3 hours 20 minutes from 6 hours 10).

But if the Nouvelle Première is successful, why wait until 1990? The original TGV equipment on the Paris-Lyon route is due for renewal in 1987, so why not start with that? Even better, if it's such a great idea, why not experiment with the TGV itself instead of an ordinary express train?

The official answer is that Paris-Strasbourg was chosen precisely because there is no TGV and that between Paris and Nancy (where there is no viable airport) the SNCF has a market share of 50 percent, which will enable them to measure the reaction of the existing passengers, whereas between Paris and Strasbourg, ability to capture passengers from Air Inter will be decisive. However, a mayerick element within the organization fears that an opportunity may have been lost. "It's a pity to make something new out of something old," a marketing executive says. "Even the name was a compromise, We would have preferred to call it something like 'Club' or 'Executive Class.' None of this detracts from the imagination and flair that has gone into the Nouvelle Première. The SNCF called upon the services of several outside experts (an unprecedented move it seems) including François Catroux, who designed the interiors of the coaches (which have a mix of conventional and more informal club-type seating); Jean Gillet, director of the Hotel Meurice in Paris, who advised on client services, and Joël Robuchon, owner-chef of Jamin, a Michelin three-star restaurant in Paris, who is responsible for creating and supervising the cuisine. This is produced in a central kitchen in Paris by René Schumayer, former maître d'hotel at the Ritz in Paris. The dishes are prepared are refrigerated (not frozen) and reheated in a specially designed steam oven on the train. The process is so successful, Robuchon says, that he has already had queries from several airlines. People are riding the train, he says, just to eat the food and the SNCF is "surprised and delighted." The French may have rediscovered that the way to a traveler's heart is through his

China's Shop Window in Hong Kong

by William Schwalbe

ONG KONG - There is a particular exhaustion that overcomes visitors to Hong Kong and renders them incapable of setting foot in one more shop. It is a symptom of overdose: According to tourism officials, the 3.2 million people who visit Hong Kong each year spend almost 65 percent of their time

Though it is undoubtedly true that the most avid of the shoppers miss seeing one of the great cities of the world, there are some shopping experiences that serve as explorations of this culture. The Chinese government operates huge department stores in Hong Kong; a trip through one of these gives a fascinating and encyclopedic look at life in Hong Kong, a Western-veneered but essentially Chinese city. These stores are also excellent places to buy food, textiles and artifacts from China.

A favorite shop of this type among residents of Hong Kong is the China Products Co. in the Causeway Bay section of Hong Kong island, Causeway Bay is a shopping, eating and residential area that, even when not particularly busy, resembles Fifth Avenue the day before Christmas. But the company's main store at 19-31 Yee Wo Street is slightly removed from the activity. It is less frenctic than the Chinese Merchandise Em-porium, at 92-94 Queen's Road, Central, but t retains something of the street-stall atmosphere missing from the high-priced, tourist-oriented Chinese Arts and Crafts stores, whose main branch is at 3 Salisbury Road. Star House. Another store is the Yue Hwa Chinese Products Emporium at 300-306 Nathan Road, Kowloon,

The best way to enter the China Products Co. (a building that takes up a city block) is from the corner of the store that angles onto Victoria Park, for this leads the customer directly into the food section. On the window ledges is an attractive selection of porcelain gingers jars. The tall ones sell for $10 (all prices are given in U.S., not Hong Kong, dollars), and the more classic squat jars sell for about $6. Each size is filled with candied

Stretching down the near wall is the tea. In this section one will find the most popular teas: scented jasmine and bitter boulei, lichee and chrysanthemum. These come loose, or packaged in painted bamboo boxes, in small tin containers and in china pots (each for less than $3). But one can also buy green teas such as the top-grade Lung Ching or the best of the white teas, the Fujian flowery silver pekoe, both of which cost about $60 a pound.

The middle of the ground floor contains a wide selection of Chinese wines. A popular gift is ginseng wine, which is delicious though bitter. The root of the ginseng plant is considered a powerful remedy for all kinds of afflictions. In the ground-floor medicinal section of the store are ginseng roots from North Korea and northern China, with price tags as high as $17,307 a tael, roughly one and a third ounces. But the wine is enjoyed as a beverage and can cost as little as $8 a

On the second floor the shopper will find clothing. Traditional garments, as well as a ge selection of Mao jackets, are availa for a reasonable price.

Min lap are short silk jackets with mandarin-style collars, subtle Jacquard patterns, and are filled with silk (a more effective insulator than goose down). The linest min lap are Peony brand from Shanghai; in blue, brown and black, they cost about $25.

Women's brocade jackets cost $12 each and come in colors such as turgoise with silver embroidery and maroon with gold, some trimmed with fake fur. Past the jackets and embroidered cardigans, past the lace and linens and behind a case full of embroidered handkerchiefs and scarves (1930s-style men's paisley silk scarves are an excellent buy at $4 each) is a special room for tobes, both casual and formal. Silk dressing gowns emblazoned with drazons sell for less than $20 as do silk night gowns, blouses, brocade smoking jackets and cotton kimonos.

Also in this room are cheongsam, the floor-length dresses with freg closures and side seams that are open to the knee. Cheongsam made of rayon can cost less than $20; for a cheongsam of silk, one would have to buy the silk and take it to a dressmaker.

OR those having clothing made in Hong Kong it is considerably cheaper to buy the fabric at the Chinese department stores, and then take it to one's tailor. The third floor of the store offers a considerable selection of fabric. Shantung silk goes for less than $6 a yard. There is raw silk and Thai silk, crepe de chine and satin. Floral prints, bamboo prints, geometric and traditional Chinese prints are available in all sorts of colors for less than $10 a yard. The brocade sells for less than $5 a yard and the most stunning has dragons in silver, salmon and royal blue. The best selection of fabric is available in January as almost everyone has clothes made for the lunar New Year celebration in February.

Hong Kong has no museum of contempo rary Chinese porcelain and jade craft, but the third floor of the store might function as one. There is bone china hidden in the back of the room, near the antique teapots. The painting on the bowls, which is done by hand, is breathtaking: intricate renderings of mythological animals and court scenes. These bowls are eggshell thin and they come with their own satin-cushioned boxes. A small one sells for around $100.

A crowd of local shoppers often gathers round the jade dragon vases; each is carved from a solid block of white jade and costs $18,000. Here, too, is cloisonne and lacquerware: A three-foot black lacquer vase with dragon and phoenix and a gold leaf interior sells for $660, but there is a large section devoted to less extravagant pieces. A 12place set of china in a wide variety of traditional patterns can be had for less than $200. complete with serving bowls.

On a less monumental scale is the chop, 2 type of seal that has been in use in China for centuries; it is a tradition that is still carried on in contemporary Hong Kong Though many younger Hong Kong Chinese prefer the Western practice of signing their name, most older Chinese still close business deals. set up bank accounts and end letters with an ink print from the characters carved on the bottom of the chop.

Jade chops, which start at $250, are impressive but most chops are made from marble, stone, ivory or plastic. A black stone chop contained in plastic tortoise, which also harbors a pad of red ink, costs $12 and makes an excellent gift; there are numerous merchants who will carve characters based on the sounds of the recipient's name into the base of a chop, for less than $10.

Near the chops is the jewelry section. This is one of the few places in Hong Kong where you can be sure that the jade you buy is jade. The small stud earrings are often made from high quality jade, Prices vary: For the darkest green jade expect to pay $40 a pair. On the far side of the jewelry section is ivory. Be sure to see the ivory mah-jongg set, which sells for $900 (plastic tiles are available for less than $15 a set).

LSO displayed in various cases in the room in which ivory is sold are figures from Chinese mythology in a wide range of sizes and workmanship. ni are porceiain siatu warrior Kwan Kung, patron of both Hong Kong's police and the colony's gangsters. Smiling at him from another case are statues of Tin Hau, goddess of seafarers, and in yet another case are figures of the goddess Koon Yum, who sits on an unfolding lotus leaf holding 16 weapons, one for each of her hands, and smiles enigmatically. Prices of the statues vary according to the quality of the details and the size, from $10 for a tiny Tin Hau to $500 for a two-foot-high Koon Yum. Most, though, sell for less than $50.

Also of note are the vases scattered about the room. The two-foot-high ones sell for less than $300, with the exception of the Kwong Sze vases from King Tak province; these go for several thousand dollars.

On the fourth floor are suitcases, musical instruments, sporting goods, shoes, leather and stationery. While most of this merchandise is not likely to tempt the Western buyer, there are some exceptional items. Among them are a gigantic kite in the form of a butterfly for $100, woven carpets from Tianjin, and a selection of brushes and ink stones or calligraphy.

LSO on the fourth floor is an office in which you can arrange for shipping which you can arrange for snipping your purchases. It is wise to watch while the goods are packed and to insist on lots of padding since there is no practical way to make a claim for damaged or missing

There is no bargaining in the Chinese government-owned department stores, and the salespeople have little patience for those not fluent in Cantonese - but as a word of comfort, they don't have much for those that are. Prices are clearly marked, however. All the stores accept major credit cards; cash transactions are in Hong Kong dollars, 7.8 to the U.S. dollar at current rates of exchange.

Other branches of the Chinese Products Co. are at 488 Hennessy Road, also in Causeway Bay and at 73 Argyle Street, in Kowloon, Hours are 11 A.M. to 9:30 P.M. daily, with a I P.M. opening on Thursday. Causeway Bay is easily accessible by tram, bus, taxi and now, by subway (Causeway

Other Chinese government-owned stores and branches of the stores mentioned can be found throughout the territories with most clustered in Tsim Sha Tsui, Kowloon, and Central, Hong Kong.

Prices Turn Down on the NYSE

Compiled by Ose Staff From Dispatches

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York

Stock Exchange turned downward Thursday as the rally of the past few sessions faltered in the face of some negative U.S. economic news.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials. which closed Wednesday at a record high, slipped 1.26 to 1.374.31.

Advances slightly outnumbered declines on the New York Stock Exchange. Volume totaled 121.53 million shares compared with 120.36 million in the previous session The NYSE's composite index lost .04 to 109.65.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .50 at 228.61. U.S. government statistics provided little support for hopes of reviving economic growth. The Commerce Department reported that the U.S. merchandise trade deficit set a record in September, with imports exceeding exports by $15.5 billion. It also said new factory orders iropped 0.6 percent last month.

The agency also said that said the index of leading economic indicators posted a smaller-than-expected 0.1-percent gain.

Nevertheless, Commerce Secretary Malcolm

Baldrige said that five consecutive monthly increases in the leading-indicators index portended continued economic growth in 1986 And speculation persisted on Wall Street that the Federal Reserve might soon relax its credit policy further. Some analysts argue that the weaker the current performance of the economy, the more likely some Fed action becomes. Charles Comer of Oppenheimer & Co. said conviction that the market will continue climbling remains set the market will continue climbling remains set the market will continue climbing remains relatively low.

M-1 Surges $8.5 Billion

NEW YORK - The narrowest measure of the U.S. money supply, known as M-1, rose $8.5 billion in the latest week, substantially more than had been expected, lessening the prospect of an immediate cut in the Federal Reserve's

The increase followed two weeks of sharp decline - $6.8 billion and $3.3 billion - and the market had been looking for an increase of around $6 billion. "But the $8.5-billion increase was a surprise and leaves M-1 roughly $10 billion above tar-get," said David M. Jones, economist at Aubrey Lanston & Co. "As a result of the rise, the Fed will hold reserve pressures stable while the dust settles on the wild volatility in money numbers the past seven weeks."

M-1 includes currency in circulation, traveler's checks and checking deposits at financial

"The bottom line is that we are seeing the current advance run out of steam," Mr. Comer

Noting the renewed linkage between the performance of the bond market and the progress of equities, Mr. Comer said that stocks could continue to take their cue from the bonds a while longer. But he said that the broader market is not performing as well as the Dow. That. rather than the progress of the blue chip index, could determine the ultimate direction of the market, Mr. Comer said.

Aerospace Cost Turning to Used Software

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1985

New York Times Service EW YORK — In the midst of a remarkably stubborn computer slump, there seems to be an insurable demand for used hardware. Now leading U.S. aerospace slightly used software that can be "recycled" — in programs for new ampianes, weapons and communications systems.

The aim is to drastically cut the time it takes to develop new equipment for the Pentagon, which recently concluded that 80 percent of the labor content in "mission critical" systems lies in the design of increasingly unwieldy programs.

Proponents of the technology, chiefly the new Software Pro ductivity Consortium in Res-tion, Virginia, boast that it could save more than half the time now required to design and write some of the largest programs used by the Defense. Department and its contractors. But other computer experts are wary and say that a host of obstacles - most tech-software for some military systems.

It now takes eight years to develop nical, some legal — will have to be surmounted before program amodules" can be snapped into place. Peter Freeman, a professor at the University of California at Irvine, where academia's largest reusable software project is under way. "The problem is that the Japanese listened to us too, and five years ago, while we were still talking, they starting doing something about it."

In the mid-1960s, when airplanes and communications systems in the into-1900s, when airpianes and communications systems were far simpler, so little depended on computers that the average military system required less than five months of software development time. Today, hardly a landing gear is locked in place or a surgiciant systems. By most estimates, it now takes eight years to develop software for a complex military system.

HE frustrating part for programmers is that much of their time is spent reinventing the wheel, writing computer code very similar to programs written many times before.

"Probably 70 percent of the software developed by the major aerospace manufacturers has been written sometime, somewhere before," said V. Edward Jones, president of the consortium, which was formed by 12 aerospace companies that include TRW, Grumman, Boeing, General Dynamics, Lockheed and Northrop. But there has never been a library where those programs can be cut up into pieces, indexed by function and then stored."

Building that library has become the first task of the consortium, which is starting with a $20-million annual budget and about 200 employees. Once the system is operating, Mr. Jones glopes, a Boeing programmer, for example, would be able to program under development and rest assured that it has already been debugged, or rid of errors.

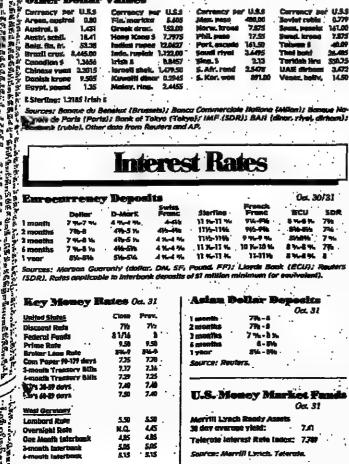

But programs, unfortunately, are rarely written in near mod-ules that can be snapped on and off like hubcaps. Instead, they are ridden with interdependencies — logical loops that rely on information gained elsewhere in the execution of the program.

"It's an interconnection problem," said Mr. Freeman. "And there is no easy way out. Sometimes you need an interconnection. language,' some way to connect all of the modules and make sure The troubles do not end there. Only recently has the Pentagon

Northwest Guards Its Pacific Flank

By Agis Salpukis
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Next year, Northwest Airlines Inc. will move its beadquarters from the Minneapolis-St. Paul International Air-port to a new building on a spacious site in rural Minnesota. From its windows, the staff will look out on three lovely duck ponds dotting the vast property, and an almost limitless view of the surrounding countryside. Until recently, the prospects for success for Northwest, the seventh-largest U.S. airline and the biggest American carrier in the lucrative Pacific market, seemed just as limitless. But for the first time since the 1950s, when Northwest was near bankruptcy, the company feels voinerable. The dark cloud on its orizon: the agreement that Pan American World Airways has negotiated to sell its ex-tensive Pacific routes to United Airlines, the largest U.S. carrier.

"United is three times the size of us," said Steven G. Rothmeier, Northwest's president and chief executive officer. "There is no way you can match their feed system."

If the Department of Transportation, which recently announced preliminary approval of the acquisition, gives the final nod to Pan Am's proposal, Mr. Rothmeier says, Northwest would be greatly weakened over the long term and may even be forced to merge with a larger carrier to survive. That, at least, is the case he has been making in his concentration in the industry will increase," vigorous effort to get the approval reversed. His campaign seems doomed. Elizabeth Hanford Doie, secretary of transportation, has rejected the argument that Northwest will be severely harmed by the United-Pan Am accord. And most airline analysts doubt that Northwest's survival is at stake.

"It could put a lot of pressure on Northwest, but not to the point of driving them out of business," said Edmund Greenslet of Mer-

Still, Mr. Greenslet adds, "it certainly will make the Pacific a much tougher place to show the kind of good results they have shown in the past." And some analysts say that if, as expected, the proposal - the largest route case in aviation history - wins final approval in its present form from Mrs. Dole this week. Northwest eventually could be forced to seek a merger partner such as Delta Air Lines or Eastern Airlines. Even then, such a merger would not give Northwest a feeder network the size of United's huge domestic system, which carries more than 120,000 pas-

Julius Maldutis, airline analyst at Salomon Brothers, says that if Northwest does wind up in a merger with a major carrier, other airlines may feel at such a disadvantage that they, too, will initiate mergers. "The degree of

he said, and that could mean more control over prices and thus higher fares for consum-

While the proposed $750-million United-Pan Am agreement has introduced some uncertainty into the long-term outlook for both the incustry and for Northwest - which this year relied on the lucrative, but increasingly competitive. Pacific market for 40 percent of its total traffic - the short-term prospects for the airline are still strong

During the past six years, Northwest has been gearing up to expand its Pacific opera-tions. As of last year, it had captured about percent of that market, compared with Pan Am's 14 percent.

In the third quarter ending Sept. 30, net profit for Northwest's parent, NWA Inc., fell 6.9 percent to $39.0 million from $45.9 million. But Northwest is considered one of the healthiest carriers in the industry, with 1984 earnings of $86.8 million on revenues of $2.4 billion, decades of steady growth, and a 30year tradition of cost-conscious management. It has paid out dividends without interruption since the early 1950s.

Although he insists that a United with Pacific routes will hobble Northwest in the long term, Mr. Rothmeier acknowledges his

Inco Ltd. Asks LME to Suspend Nickel Trading

LONDON -- Inco Ltd., the big Toronto-based nickel producer, said Thursday that it had asked the London Metal Exchange to consider halting trading in nickel because by the tin crisis.

There was no immediate reaction from the exchange. But analysis said the request was a clear sign that the week-old suspension of tin trading by the LME is beginning to affect other metals markets.

Dealers said Thursday that spot metal prices fell during the session in erratic and sometimes disorderly trading as buyers backed away from committing cash to physical metals of any kind. Buyers were reluctant to take delivery even at discounts, the dealers noted.

The LME suspended tin trading last Thursday after the International Tin Council, comprising the 22 major tin producing and consuming countries, said it could no long-er afford to support the metal's price at agreed-upon levels. The suspension has been extended until at least Monday, and worldwide tin trading has been virtually shot down amid fears that the metal's price could collapse once it is lifted. Traders said that if tin trading is resumed without ITC support, the metal's price could tumble by as much as £2.000 ($2,850) a ton from its level of £8,140 before the ITC problems surfaced last week. Inco, the non-communist world's largest nickel producer, said it had requested the trading suspension because the current "tin crisis in unduly influencing" nickel

Nickel fell to $1.76 a pound on the LME Thursday from $1.78 on Wednesday. It traded earlier this week at $1.90 a pound.

Most analysts agreed that Inco's request would likely be refused on the grounds that many LME members holding tin might go bankrupt if unable to liquidate their nickel holdings. Meanwhile, banking sources said

Thursday that banks threatened by the crisis in the world tin market met Thursday with the Bank of England, which oversees the London Metal Exchange

Banks from Malaysia, the world's largest tin producer, were among those meeting with Britain's central bank in an apparent effort to secure financial backing, according to the sources. The Bank of England refused to confirm the meeting, citing its rule of confidentiality.

Creditors Extend V*e*nezuela Freeze On Public Debt

CARACAS - Venezuela's creditor banks granted a 30-day extension to its 214-year public sector debt payments freeze. banking sources said Thursday.

The extension, which begins Friday, was intended to give more time to reach agreement on a draft model contract for the $21.2-billion package that must go out to 450 creditor banks for approval. Outline agreement was reached in September last year but contract agreement has been held up by Venezuelan insistence on a contingency clause for unforeseen economic cirrumstances. The sources said Venezuela was seeking renego-tiation of the agreement should oil prices plunge.

The big jump came from a 21.8percent surge in imports, to $33.3 billion, the Commerce Department said. Exports rose 1.8 percent, to $17.7 billion.

Some economists had been expressing moderate optimism based on a belief that the worst of the country's trading woes might be over with the declines this year in the value of the dollar.

The September deficit, which innded a record deficit of $5.1 billion with Japan, left the imbalance for the first nine months of the year at $106.7 billion, 12 percent worse than the same period last year. This year's total deficit is expected to hit $150 billion, far above last year's record of $123.3 billion. Meanwhile, economists said that the slight 0.1-percent rise in the Index of Leading Indicators, which is designed to forecast the future course of the economy, was in line with expectations. The September rise, the smallest since an identical gain in June, marked the fifth consecutive month that the index has shown an increase.

Economists pointed out, however, that the index is a notoriously volatile yardstick that is often subiect to wide revisions. Indeed, the department revised the August index to a 0.9-percent gain from 0.7 percent but left the rise in the July dex unchanged at 0.7 percent. David Wyss, an economist with

Mexico Raises Light Oil, Cuts Heavy Crude

MEXICO CITY - Mexico has announced that it will raise the price of light crude and lower the price of heavy oil.

The government oil compa-ny, Petróleos Mexicanos, said Wednesday that Mexico was raising the price of light crude by an average of 60 cents a barrel. The price of heavy crude will fall 40 cents.

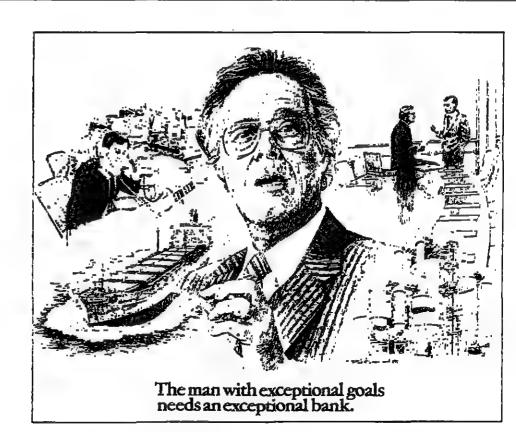

Pemex said the new prices, effective Friday, would bring more money to Mexico, which has a $96.4-billion debt. Two major earthquakes in September have further aggravated the country's problems.

Pemex said light Isthmus oil would rise from $26.25 to $26.75 a barrel for Europe. from $26.50 to $26.90 for the Far East, and from $26.75 to $27.50 for the United States.

Heavy Maya oil will drop from $22.50 to $22.10 for Europe, from $23 to $22.60 for the Far East, and from $23.50 to $23.10 for the United States. Mexico's volume of exports from July to October averaged more than 1.525 million barrels

BANKS' ACT REQUIREMENTS

The present capital position of the banks in the Nedbank Group is adequate to comply with the anticipated initial, more stringent capital ratios which will be required in terms of the recent amendments to the Banks' Act. REVIEW

During the first half of the financial year under review the economic recession in South Africa and the abnormally high interest rate pattern which pertained continued the adverse impact, which had been seen in the previous financial year, on the earnings of the banking companies in the Group. During the second half the economy responded to the discipline of the restrictive fiscal and monetary stance the authorities had adopted. At the cost of largely increased unemployment and underutilisation of capacity throughout the country, the current external account was brought into satisfactory surplus, the underlying inflation rate abated somewhat, the financial markets showed less strain and interest rates began to ease downwards. Political events then became dominant. The late August 1985 announcement of the temporary and partial suspension of repayments abroad, and the reimposition of exchange controls - while a response to external pressure which was draining South Africa's stock of foreign exchange —caused a severe jolt. It marked the move towards a less outward-oriented and market-directed phase of development for the South African economy. The disruption to the international financial mechanism impacted particularly on Nedbank. Being the only South African institution with significant banking offices abroad (which remained open during part of the period when South Africa's foreign exchange market was closedt. Nedbank was first in line as foreign banks sought ways of reducing their aggregate exposure to South African risk.

While Nedbank's London and New York branches were subjected to considerable stress by these developments. the situation has since been stabilised and the international payments mechanism cleared. The bank's foreign liabilities were in large part on-lent to public sector bodies in South Africa, which lendings are denominated and repayable in the same currencies as the bank's liabilities. The Group has no open or exposed foreign exchange

As a result of the international developments the activities of Nedbank's London branch – which started operations 78 years ago – and of the New York branch are being scaled down.

LOSS PROVISIONS

The intensity of the domestic economic downturn and the volatility and degree of the depreciation of the rand have been exceptional by post war standards. They have led to corporate failures and difficulties, resulting in substantial charges for had and doubtful debts being borne by banks in the Croup. In addition to the provisions for specific doubtful accounts, general non-specific reserves for unforesecta losses are at an internationally acceptable level of more than one per cent of the loan portfolios.

OUTLOOK

The debt rescheduling arrangements, and so the market and policy environment within which the now delayed but still expected - revival in the page of South Africa's economic activity will occur, are not yet known. Economic growth, once the present uncertainties have been cleared, is likely to be more locally oriented than in the past but it will not necessarily be less vigorous. In the present volatile financial and market circumstances an earnings forecast is extremely difficult. but Group budgets indicate that there is a reasonable prospect, allowing for the likely drop in income from overseas operations, of approximating the 1984/85 profit levels

FINAL DIVIDEND

Non-resident shareholders' tax will be deducted from dividends payable to non-resident shareholders. The transfer registers will close from 2 November 1985 and reopen on 11 November 1985. In August 1985, Research Services Ltd. released a study of the reading habits of international financial managers in Europe.* The study showed conclusively that more read Institutional Investor than any other magazine...including:

- The Economist
- Euromoney
- Business Week
- Fortune
- Time Newsweek
- Der Spiegel
- Le Nouvel Economiste

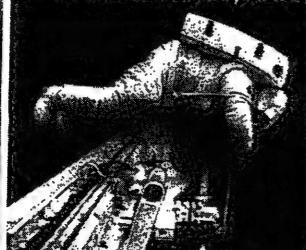

In fact, in virtually every categoryfrom job responsibility of financial manager to industry to geographic location, the story remained the same: Institutional Investor ranked first.

And if worldwide leadership is not reason enough to advertise in Institutional Investor, here is another: thanks to strengthening international currencies, coupled with a new rate structure, an advertising schedule in 1986 will cost international marketers significantly less than it did in 1985.

Put first things first. Contact your Institutional Investor account executive today. Or, contact Christine Cavolina, European Advertising Director, in London at (01) 379-7511. In New York, contact Denise C. Coleman, V.P. & International Advertising Director at (212) 303-3388.

South Africa's Mediator Is Said to Urge Reforms

By Allister Sparks
Washington Post Service
JOHANNESBURG — South Africa will not solve its foreigndebt crisis unless it makes major political changes and moves to end racial unrest, according to a source close to the banker mediating the debt dispute between South Africa and the banks holding its $14-billion short-term foreign debt. The unnamed source, purportedly expressing the views of the negotiator, Fritz Leutwiler, was quoted in an interview in South Africa's leading financial daily, Business Day, that creditor banks would refuse to sign an agreement on the country's debt freeze unless the internal political situation changed. If there were no change, the banks would maintain a capital boycott of South Africa, the source

The warning from South Africa's own mediators came just one week after Mr. Leutwiler met with the creditor banks in London, and as the country underwent a test of white attitudes toward reform and the continuing unrest with a series of special legislative elections.

According to the source quoted by Business Day, who was inter-viewed in Zurich, the attitude of the banks has been stiffened by some of Pretoria's recent hard-line actions. He cited as an example the execution of Benjamin Moloise, an African National Congress member, despite international appeals for elemency.

American banks had taken the lead in insisting on political change as a condition for reaching an agreement, the source said, but he stressed that others, including at least one prominent Swiss bank, were now also taking this line.

South Africa declared a moratorium on debt repayments Sept. 1 when U.S. banks then other banks refused to roll over the country's short-term loans, causing a slump in the rand. U.K. Joblessness Stayed at 13.1% For October adjusted unemployment rate in Britain was steady at 13.1 percent in October, the government announced Thursday.

While the actual number of unemployed people fell by 69,337 in October, the adjusted adult jobless rate — the best guide to employment trends fell by only 4,300, the Employment Department said. Employment Secretary Lord Young said the figures were "mildly encouraging." but op-position spokesmen accused the Conservative government of acquiescing in unemployment.

On an unadjusted hasis, the unemployment rate dropped from 13.8 percent of the work force to 13.5 percent, with almost 3.28 million out of work. "Unemployment after allowing for seasonal adjustments has remained broadly level for the last six months," Lord Young said. But he said that "more months of figures like these will be needed before we can be sure that the long, persistent upward rise in unemploy-ment has come to an end."

Northwest's battle with the Department of Transportation and with United comes at a time when the Pacific market is growing ever more lucrative. Traffic has jumped during the past 24 years to 6.2 mil-lion from 362,000 and is expected to grow by 8 percent to 9 percent over the next five years. That sort of growth has prompted foreign carriers such as JAL and Singapore Airlines to plunk down billions for jumbo Boeings so that they, too, can expand their routes.

Amends Remark ZURICH - Pierre Langue

By Brenda Erdmann tin, president of Swiss National Bank, ruled out on Thursday LONDON - Prime Computer the possibility of a wide-ranging liberalization of the Swiss capital markets.

Mr. Languetin said in Lausanne on Oct. 24 that the bank might consider a liberalization of the laws that restrict francbond issuing to banks based

On Thursday he said that any changes, which he said were still only under review, would concern adjustments to regulations governing dual-currency bonds - bonds issued in one currency but repaid in another.

settled on a single computer lan-guage, called ADA, for all of its systems. But the consortium's hbrary, which is really just a large computer data base, will be filled with programs written in a dozen computer languages,

"In most cases, we won't have the tools for translation," said Mr. "In those cases, it would probably be faster just to write the program again, in the language you need.

Moreover, not all the programs in the library will be available for lending. While participants in the consortium say they expect no anti-trust objections from the Justice Department over joint research, sharing proprietary computer programs among the companies may be tempting fate. As a result, TRW will be able to catalog all of its own programming work, but it will not have access, for instance, to

In time, however, access to the programming code itself may be less important than access to the concepts underlying it. At the University of California, Mr. Freeman and others are looking for ways to reuse generalized designs and prohas not yet been named.

THE YOUNG SCIENTISTS WHO ARE INVENTING THE WEAPON-RY OF SPACE

By William J. Broad. 236 pages. $16.95. Simon & Schuster, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N. Y. 10020. U.S. POLICY, 1945-84

By Paul B. Stares; $25; 334 pages. Cornell University:

Reviewed by Robert M. Bowman

I T IS fascinating how two books on roughly the same subject can be so completely different. William J. Broad and Paul B. Stares have produced two excellent books on weapons in space — with no overlap whatsoever.

Both present their material chronologically, with each chapter representing a period of time dominated by an individual. In "Star War-riors" by Broad, the period is a day in his visit to the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory, and the individuals are young scientists involved in the development of "Third-Generation Nucle-ar Weapons" for "Star Wars." In "The Militarization of Space" by Stares, the period covers a number of years, and the individual is at every point a president of the United States trying to cope with the possibility of an arms. race in space. Broad's book covers one week; Stares's covers four decades.

The subject of both books is space weaponry. Yet one would be hard pressed to find a single system that is mentioned in both books. "Star Warriors" by Broad deals in the weapons of the future, while Stares documents those of the past. And while both authors recognize the ence of a relationship between the two, Broad concentrates on 'Star Wars' (satellites to shoot down missiles), while Stares emphasizes ASATs (missiles to shoot down missiles).

The biggest difference between these two books is in their style. Broad's book is intimate. even gripping. It reads like a good novel. A science reporter for The New York Times, he makes the characters come alive — all of them, from a historical giant like Edward Teller to the ex-fiance of one of the scientists in the lab. He seems to understand that it is almost impossible to judge a proposal (whether for a trillion-dollar weapon system or for a thousand-dollar used car) without knowing the underlying motivation — 23d by 161-23m; the mentality of those selling "Star Wars," no hay made an impact of the mentality of the selling "Star Wars," no hay made an important contribution to the public

Solution to Previous Puzzle

Where Broad really shines is in his acility to make science interesting Unlike main science popularizers, who oversimplify complex phenomena and turn it into rseudo-science, he serves up the real thing. Though explained the

such a way that it is easily understandable to the layman, his science is nonetheless correct. in describing a laser, for example, Broad says, "What makes the bursts so special is that they are coherent; that is show the proof the they are coherent; that is, they are made up of radiation whose waves are all in step with one another." And he describes a laborator, laser experiment this way: "What was about to happen was the creation of an intense pulse of visible light — but one that was very special, Regular light is made up of electromagnetic waves of many different frequencies and waves of many different frequencies and phases that often interfere with one another, just as waves on the ocean surface often cancel each other out. In contrast, waves of laser light have exactly the same frequency and direction of motion and are perfectly in step with one another. They are a pounding rhythm of light."

By comparison, Robert Jastrow in his recent book devoted a whole chapter to explaining lasers without even mentioning coherence Broad is to be congratulated for not trivializing

Stares's book, on the other hand, is as climcal as Broad's is intimate. Stares is a scholar (a very good one) and his book reflects that. It reads a bit like a Ph. The appendices alone are worth the price of the book to appendice a lone are worth the price of the book to anyone interested in space weapons. Though I later read it from cover to cover. very few who buy the book will ever do so unless they enjoy drinking from a firebose. This is meant as a caution, not a criticism, for the book is very well written. Of course, so is the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

With all their great differences, the two books wind up with similar conclusions. Stares writes. "The advent of anti-satellite and other space weapons will be akin to opening the mythical Pandora's box. The putative benefits of such weapons will be short-lived or, more likely, illusosy. Instead, the superpowers will become locked into a never-ending, ever-demanding search for security in space that will leave them worse off than before."

At the end of his innensive investigation of "Star Wars," Broad concludes, "Using it for anything other than a bargatuing chip seems pure folly. A week of conversations at the lab convinced me that the assertions of the critics are generally correct. A move to defense would touch off an expensive new arms race that would make the world a more dangerous place

After the Nets lost to the Pacers. 119-92, on Saturday, Richardson vowed he would get even Wednesday. It took him a while, but he finally did it, with help from Otis Birdsong, Darryl Dawkins and Buck Williams

Birdsong scored 28 points, Dawkins hit 10 of 12 field goals and 20 points and 23 rebounds as New Jersey set a team record with 79 rehounds, one more than the previous high.

"Pride was the difference," said Dave Wohl, the winners' coach. "It was more mental toughness than anything else. Richardson was great. He took over when the game was in the balance and did what he had to do."

middleweight champion, "is just right for me." Even Hagler didn't know how right. With an accidental head butt moments later, the kid broke the champion's nose. As a result, Hagler's title bout with John Mugabi of Uganda, scheduled for Nov. 14 in Las Vegas, has been postponed, probably until early next year. Also delayed will be his eventual rematch with Thomas Hearns, which had been blueprinted for March 24 by promoter Bob

But the fractured nose (the disclosure was made Wednesday) was a marvelous break for the marvelous middleweight champion.

With a 61-2-2 record and unbeater, for the last 10 years. Hagler hasn't made many mistakes in boxng. But he was about to make what could have been a big one. Instead of postponing his title defense against Mugabi despite an ailing back, he had resumed training on Monday. Described at first by his personal doctor as an acute lumbosacral strain, the spinal ailment was diagnosed in Palm Springs "as having symptoms of a possible rup-tured disk," by Dr. Anthony Daly, the I984 Olympic medical director. victory over the Indiana Pacers theirs. For two reasons: It was his back and it was his title. Had he climbed into the ring Nov. 14 wondering if his back was ready physically, he also would have been wondering if he was ready mentally.

"But with all the commitments he had said, "I hope my back will hold up."

Hagler's like that. As one of pature's noblemen, he's always doing favors for people. But by trying, as he said, "to make the date" despite the back, he wasn't doing himself a favor - not even for a $3.1 million guarantee. As it turned out, the broken nose did him a favor he wouldn't ask of others.

Upheaval in Twain Town

ANNIBAL Missouri — The seven-month festival celebrating the 150th anniversary of Mark Twain's birth may have given Rimibal a big boost as a tourist attraction, but it left the city's gov-With the celebration in its final Seek, the Mississippi River com-munity of 19,000 people is without a mayor and three of its 12 city councilmen, victims of a bitter squabble caused at least in part by the festival.

The sesquicentennial celebration has done remarkably well under adverse conditions," former Mayor John Lyng, a member of the fesuval commission, said in a recent interview. "Out of a budget that eventually reached $850,000, we are only about $20,000 to $25,000 short and we should make that up with collections, sales of inventory and pledges by the end of the month."

Even before the event opened last spring, it ran into problems. A $1.5 million budget was proposed, but that was trimmed to $560,000. Organizers had envisioned a long series of concerts by top groups, permanent additions to the historic downtown district and even an international balloon race. An amphitheater was built on the southern edge of the town's waterfront, but a theme stage planned for the northern part didn't materialize. The balloon race also failed to come off and some of the musical events were canceled. Meantime, Lyng was defeated as he sought re-election. Most attribute the loss to anti-festival senti-However, Lyng's successor, Richard Cerretti, resigned Nov. 12 after being threatened with impeachment. Three councilmen accused him of misusing city equip-ment and labor, and illegally taping telephone conversations. The three councilmen, Wayne Pafford, John Hamilton and James Dexheimer, also resigned. All four men said they would seek re-election in a special election in Febru-

Cerretti had made the festival an issue in his mayoral campaign, saying there were better ways to spend city funds for economic develop-ment. "I wasn't critical of the festi-val itself," Cerretti said Wednesday. "I was critical of the planners. We spent huge sums of money and got nothing for it."

Although none of the impeachment charges against Cerretti in-volved the festival, his criticism of the festival had provoked resentment within the council. The council voted last month to suspend the mayor with pay pending an im-peachment hearing, which was canceled after the resignations were

Local feelings were not soothed, either, by an article in the Wall Street Journal on Aug. 6, which city officials said "did a hatchet job" on the town and the festival by listing all of its negative aspects.

"The reporter found and quoted lots of critics of the sesquicentennial, but apparently wasn't as zealous in his pursuit of the other side of the story," wrote Gil Stuenkel, managing editor of the Hannibal

Through it all, however, the festival drew several hundred thousand visitors over the summer and nearly paid for itself. "We'll know after Nov. 30," the official closing, said the Reverend Peter C. Hauser, who quit the sesquicentennial commission in the spring because "there were waves threatening to sink the ship." He has changed his mind, however. "I believe a sizable portion of the community now recog-nizes that it was a worthwhile event. They didn't think it could be pulled off, but it was,"

"Maybe some of the dreams were too large," said Tom Boland, president of the Chamber of Commerce. Lyng added: "It's just too bad that the political laundry was hung out to dry just as we were calling national attention to ourselves.

Twain would have loved it. When politics enter into municipal government," he once wrote, "nothing resulting therefrom in the way of crimes and infamies is then incredible. It actually enables us to accept and believe the impossible."

New York Times Service AINEESHPURAM. Oregon — What used to be the reception center has become the departure lounge as the population of the Rajneeshee commune here melts away.

Throughout the day the red-clad followers of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh bring their luggage to a curb here, where it sits in the gently spiraling snowfall, as they wait for the bus that takes them out. Their guru has gone to India after a plea bargain on a federal indictment for immigration fraud. There is an uneasiness among some followers as they face a new life. "I've lived here these years where I was provided for," said Swami Sagar Chetcan, who was running the cash register at the delicatessen. "My clothes were clean. I had clean sheets. I was fed. I had a doctor when I was ill and a dentist when I had a toothache. Now I'm about to go out in the world again, that success-oriented place, and it worries me. 1 don't even have clothes to wear to be interviewed for a job, except these. What would I say, that I've been a member of a cult?"

Declining to give his pre-commune name, as did all others interviewed, he was wearing the red colors of the commune members. as well as the mala, a medallion with a picture of the guru, around his neck on a string of wooden

It is a time of embraces, of goodbyes, of promises to remain contact, of shared memories.

Waiting at the bus stop where they had put down their luggage, Putorna, a former Eastern Airlines cabin attendant, and Shiva Nanda, a former structural engineer in Copenhagen, both said they had joined the guru in Poona, India,

Putorna said she was jaded with travel around the world on her airline passes and had agreed to go with a friend, a New York stockbroker, to India, where they looked up the gurn, "At that time Bhagwan was in silence, I sat and looked at him and it came to me that there was more in life."

She came back to the United States and then returned to Poona to live. In 1983 she rejoined the group here. She drove a taxi around the commune.

Mitchell in an interview. "Now he has left two groups of followers in the lurch when the going got tough."

The commune rode roughshod over the residents of Antelope when they criticized it in 1982. Rajneeshees moved into Antelope, voted and took over the city government, renaming the place Rajneesh. At the Bhagwan's sug-gestion, in the Nov. 5 election they voted to rename it Antelope.

Life at Rajneeshpuram began to fall apart in mid-September when Ma Anand Sheela, the guru's chief aide, left with some of her staff. Rajneesh announced to the others that Sheela, who is also known as Sheela Patel Silverman. had done many bad things, such as plotting murder, tapping tele-phones and grabbing power. rom Europe she retorted that the commune's troubles stemmed from the guru's demand for more and more jewelry, more Rolls-Royce cars for his fleet, which numbers about 85, and other wasteful luxuries.

On Oct. 23 a federal grand jury in Portland indicted Raineesh and others on charges that they plotted sham marriages to bring his followers of foreign citizen-ship into the United States from his prior commune in Poona.

Officials say they believe Rajneesh learned of his indictment and fled Rajneeshpuram in a jet. He was arrested in Charkotte, North Carolina, and returned to Portland to face charges.

On Oct. 28, Sheela and others were arrested in West Germany on charges made in a Wasco County, Oregon, grand jury indictment that they tried to murder Raineesh's physician in a struggle for power in the com-

On Nov. 14, Rajneesh pleaded guilty to two counts of the indictment. He paid a $400,000 fine and was ordered to leave the United States. He left that day, saying he hoped never to return, and is reported to be in India.

Rajneesh's followers here were told last week by Dyan John, finance officer for the commune. that the commune had current when he came to the United debts to purveyors of about $1.5 million and a long-term debt of $35 million, mostly to a web of Rajneeshee corporation

[Followers of the Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh have received an invitation from the Indian guru to join a commune in Poona, but those remaining at the central Oregon settlement showed little enthusiam Thursday about the offer, United Press International reported. Eighty-two of the guru's Rolls-Royce automobiles were sold to a Texas dealer. Rajneeshee officials said furnishings and equipment of the commune will be sold at an auction beginning Dec. 17.] So the guru's followers have begun to melt away. Theirs num-bers have dwindled to fewer than 1,000, and that is quickly diminishing.

Back at the commune, those not ready to leave met to talk over the past. On a bench outside the delicatessen a woman in late middle age talked of her experience at the commune. "Life is its own meaning," she said.

She had lived in Bellevue, a Seattle suburb, and conducted therapy sessions at a humanistic center, she said, giving her name as Dysan.

She heard things that attracted ber to Poona. There she met the gurn and decided, "I wanted to be with this man because he trig-gered a sense of well-being." She sold her home and moved to Poona. Then she followed the guru to Oregon. Now she will go back to the Seartle area to live with relatives. Ma Prem Manon, a woman in her early 30s, was on duty at the main gate. She said she would go back to Palo Alto, California, to visit her family, and then on to Santa Fe, New Mexico, where she was a waitress and masseuse. "If I had done the sex stuff, I would have made a lot more money, she said, "but I was too shy then and now I'm too scared of disease. I just missed out all the way around.

On the road out, up the hill above Curdijeff Dam and Krishnamurti Lake, which is dedicated to the guru, the exodus passed an attractive billboard on which was printed: "I go to the feet of the awakened one."

It will be about 18 months before we can mount the operation technically but there is nothing that can stop us now." The mayor proposed that some of the city's lights be turned off on certain nights at certain locations between Dec. 1 and Jan. 15 to make the celestial light show more visible. The mayor asked his Commission for Science and Technology to rec-ommend steps the city could take to dim lights and improve the view of the passing comer.
